Eccentricity, or eccentricities, or peculiarities,<sup>56</sup> or deviation or departure from normal conduct,<sup>57</sup> or from normal thought or action,<sup>58</sup> do not of themselves render a person incompetent to make a will, although they may be taken into consideration with other facts in determining whether the testator is of such mental capacity as the law requires for making a will.<sup>59</sup> Courts guard jealously the rights of all rational people, including the queer, to make wills.<sup>60</sup>

§ 23. Prejudices and Beliefs

Unjust prejudices do not deprive a person of testamentary capacity, nor do peculiar beliefs or opinions, unless they prevent the exercise of a rational judgment with respect to the disposition of his property.

A person does not lack testamentary capacity merely because he holds unjust prejudices,<sup>69</sup> or beliefs or opinions generally regarded as peculiar or unsound,<sup>70</sup> or as false,<sup>71</sup> or absurd,<sup>72</sup> or fixed notions and opinions on family or financial matters;<sup>73</sup> but a peculiar belief may be material in connection with other circumstances in determining the question of capacity<sup>74</sup>

Piety or devotion to one's church and its institutions,<sup>86</sup> or solicitation for the spiritual welfare of others in whom the testator is interested,<sup>87</sup> does not indicate weak mentality, nor does religious zeal import testamentary incapacity<sup>88</sup>

A testator is incompetent if his mind is so controlled by his peculiar views as to prevent the exercise of a rational judgment touching the disposition of his property,<sup>89</sup> so, a belief in spiritualism may be possessed to the extent that it destroys the will power and overcomes it<sup>90</sup>

§ 24. Moral Delinquency

Moral delinquency alone does not amount to testamentary incapacity.

Moral delinquency alone does not amount to testamentary incapacity<sup>91</sup>

§ 25. Use of Intoxicants

The fact that a person uses, or is addicted to, intoxicants does not deprive him of testamentary capacity unless, at the time he executes the will, they deprive him of judgment, reason, or comprehension

If the testator's mind is capable of understanding those essential matters necessary to the execution of a will, as discussed supra § 15, at the time the

will is made, supra § 5, he has testamentary capacity, even though he is in some degree under the influence of intoxicating liquors,<sup>92</sup> or although he is of intemperate habits and frequently or habitually intoxicated,<sup>93</sup> or has been judicially declared a drunkard<sup>94</sup> or a lunatic from alcoholic dementia<sup>95</sup> This is so even though his mind is so weakened by intoxicants that he cannot take care of his estate<sup>96</sup> To constitute insanity, in this connection, more than dipsomania must be shown<sup>97</sup>

On the other hand, a testator does not have capacity if, at the time the will is executed, he is deprived of judgment and reason,<sup>98</sup> or is prevented from having an independent comprehension of what he is doing,<sup>99</sup> by the use of intoxicants, or if he is suffering from chronic alcoholic insanity.<sup>1</sup>

§ 26. Use of Drugs

The mere fact of using drugs does not deprive a person of testamentary capacity, but the use may be so excessive as to have that effect.

A user of drugs is not incapacitated, by the fact of such use, from making a will,<sup>2</sup> although such use is a factor to be considered,<sup>3</sup> but the general principles as to testamentary capacity, as discussed supra § 15, apply<sup>4</sup> It is possible that a testator may have testamentary capacity even though it is

It is one of the painful consequences of extreme old age that it ceases to excite interest and is apt to be left solitary and neglected, the control which the law still gives to a man over the disposal of his property is one of the most efficient means which he has in protracted life to command the attentions due to his infirmities

(1) Senile dementia not shown to render testatrix of insufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of the act, to recollect the extent of her property and the natural objects of her bounty and their claims on her, and to comprehend the manner in which she wishes her property distributed, is not, of itself, sufficient to deprive testatrix of testamentary capacity

this fact is to be determined according to the rules applicable to other forms of insanity<sup>42</sup>

inconsistent with, or does not disclose or constitute a lack of, testamentary capacity, although failing memory is a fact to be considered in determining whether such capacity existed<sup>48</sup> It has been said that the tendency of the courts is more and more toward the upholding of wills which are attacked by dissatisfied relatives who are usually able to produce some evidence of failure of memory<sup>49</sup>

If the testator has sufficient mental capacity to recollect the particulars essential to a valid testamentary disposition, as discussed supra § 15, he has testamentary capacity even though his memory may be feeble or somewhat impaired,<sup>50</sup> and even though he may have lapses of memory<sup>51</sup> or periods of absent-mindedness<sup>52</sup>

Failure to remember names. Forgetfulness of the names of persons a testator has known does not establish his incompetency<sup>53</sup> The mere failure to remember a given name correctly is not sufficient to create testamentary incapacity,<sup>54</sup> likewise, a slip of the testator's memory as to the name of the person to whom he was talking when he appeared sleepy or unconscious is not a test of his testamentary capacity<sup>55</sup>

§ 29. Sickness, Disease, and Physical Infirmary

Sickness, disease, or physical infirmity, while properly considered in determining testamentary capacity, does not of itself incapacitate a person from executing a valid will.

testamentary capacity arises. The presumption obtains over the entire process of the execution of the will in the absence of credible evidence to the contrary.<sup>10</sup> The presumption is one of fact,<sup>11</sup> and has no greater force than any other rebuttable presumption in any ordinary civil case.<sup>12</sup> While the presumption has been held not to be evidence,<sup>13</sup> where the will appears to be a rational act performed in a rational manner the presumption amounts to evidence of testamentary capacity.<sup>14</sup> It will continue until overcome by evidence.<sup>15</sup> It is rebutted by evidence that the testator was afflicted with insanity of a permanent nature before the execution of the will.<sup>16</sup> In some jurisdictions, however, on proceedings for the probate of a will there is no presumption of testamentary capacity.<sup>17</sup>

Inability to speak Fact that the testator could not speak articulately does not raise a presumption of testamentary incapacity.<sup>19</sup>

Preparation by attorney The fact that a will is prepared by an attorney at the request of the testator and in accordance with his directions without interference from anyone, affords an inference that it was properly made by a person of testamentary capacity.<sup>20</sup>

b. Burden of Proof

- (1) In general, on probate of will
- (2) Actions to set aside will or probate

(1) In General, on Probate of Will

The burden of proof on the probate of a will, rests, in many jurisdictions on the proponent of the will to prove testamentary capacity as of the time of the execution of the will, according to the rule announced in some decisions the burden of proof rests on the contestant on the probate of the will to prove testamentary incapacity of the testator at the time the will was executed.

On the probate of a will there is some confusion in the cases on the incidence of the burden of proof as to testamentary capacity.<sup>21</sup> Notwithstanding the presumption of testamentary capacity, the rule in many jurisdictions is that the burden of proof, properly speaking, rests on the proponent of the will to prove testamentary capacity as of the time of the execution of the will.<sup>22</sup> While the burden of

force to turn the scale in favor of capacity.<sup>28</sup> If, on the whole evidence, including the presumption of capacity, the scales are in even balance, the finding must be for the contestant.<sup>29</sup>

(2) Actions to Set Aside Will or Probate

After the probate of a will, one who brings an action or proceeding to contest its validity and to have it set aside on the ground of testamentary incapacity has the burden of proving such incapacity

As a general rule one who, after the probate of a will, brings an action or proceeding to contest its validity and to have it set aside on the ground of testamentary incapacity has the burden of proving such incapacity<sup>36</sup> While in statutory proceedings to contest a will after probate in some jurisdictions the proponent must in the first instance establish testamentary capacity, as considered infra subdivision c (2) of this section, the burden of proof on the whole case rests on the contestant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence testamentary incapacity<sup>37</sup> The presumption of capacity is thrown into the scales in favor of proponent,<sup>38</sup> and, in order for contestant to succeed, he must adduce evidence sufficient to overcome the presumption of capacity and affirmative evidence in support of the will<sup>39</sup>

In some jurisdictions statutory proceedings to contest a will after probate are in the nature of appeals from probate in which a trial de novo is had, and the proponent of the will, as defendant in the contest, has the burden of proving testamentary capacity<sup>40</sup> Although the burden of going forward

may shift, as discussed infra subdivision c of this section, the burden of proof never shifts,<sup>41</sup> but remains on the proponent throughout the entire case<sup>42</sup> A prima facie case does not shift the burden of proof<sup>43</sup>

Revocation of probate. In a proceeding to revoke the probate of a will, as considered infra §§ 502-513, the burden is on the contestant to prove mental incompetency of the testator at the time the will was executed<sup>44</sup> The burden is on the contestant to overcome the primary presumption of testamentary capacity,<sup>45</sup> and also of the order involving an adjudication on probate on presumptively sufficient evidence to justify it<sup>46</sup>

c. Burden of Going Forward; Prima Facie Case; Shifting of Burden

- (1) On probate of will
- (2) Actions to set aside will or probate

(1) On Probate of Will

According to some decisions the proponent of the will may not rest solely on the presumption of testamentary capacity, but must prove the testamentary capacity of the deceased at the time the will was written, but in other jurisdictions the proponent need only prove due execution of the will to make a prima facie case, and may rely on the presumptive proof of capacity until sufficient evidence to the contrary is produced.

There is a conflict of authority on the question whether the presumption of capacity is sufficient to establish a prima facie case of testamentary incapacity on probate without the introduction of additional evidence on the preliminary proof.<sup>47</sup> This question is distinct from the burden of proof on the whole case.<sup>48</sup> According to some decisions the proponent of the will may not rest solely on the presumption of testamentary capacity<sup>49</sup> but must prove, in addition to the formal execution of the will, as considered infra § 383, the testamentary capacity of deceased at the time the will was executed,<sup>50</sup> even, according to some decisions, when no contest is entered.<sup>51</sup> This has been held to be the rule even in jurisdictions where the burden of proof on the whole issue is on the contestant.<sup>52</sup> If the subscribing witnesses testify that the testator was of sound mind when the will was executed it is sufficient to make a prima facie case.<sup>53</sup>

In some jurisdictions the proponent need only prove due execution of the will to make a prima facie case,<sup>54</sup> and may rely on the presumptive proof of capacity until sufficient evidence to the contrary is produced.<sup>55</sup> This is true although the burden of proof, properly speaking, rests on the proponent.<sup>56</sup> According to the rule announced in some decisions, where the due execution of the will is proved and it is not irrational in its provisions or inconsistent in its structure with the sanity of the testator, the presumption of capacity establishes for the proponent a prima facie case of capacity,<sup>57</sup> but if the will is so irrational or inconsistent as to be incompatible with mental soundness, introduction of evidence of mental soundness is necessary on the preliminary proof for the propounders.<sup>58</sup>

Shifting of burden The burden of going forward to show testamentary incapacity shifts to the contestant when due execution of the will is proved to make a prima facie case,<sup>59</sup> or, under other authorities, when a prima facie case is made out by the introduction of evidence of capacity.<sup>60</sup>

"There is some confusion in the reported cases on the adjustment of the burden of proof of insanity in will contests. But we think the weight of authority, both in England and this country, establishes the rule that the production of a paper writing purporting to be the will of a deceased person, which is rational on its face, and which is proved to have been executed and witnessed in accordance with the statute, makes a prima facie case, and devolves upon the contestants the onus of showing the testator's incompetency. This rule rests upon the presumption that all men are sane until the contrary is proved."

While in some jurisdictions in statutory proceedings to contest a will after probate proof of due execution is sufficient to make a prima facie case, and the burden of establishing incapacity passes to the contestant, in other jurisdictions, the proponent may not rely in the first instance on the presumption of capacity, but must prove the testamentary competency of the testator in order to make out a prima facie case

In some jurisdictions in statutory proceedings to contest a will after probate proof of due execution is sufficient to make a prima facie case,<sup>61</sup> and the burden of establishing incapacity passes to the contestant<sup>62</sup> In other jurisdictions the proponent may not rely in the first instance on the presumption of capacity,<sup>63</sup> but must prove, in addition to due execution, the testamentary competency of the testator in order to make out a prima facie case<sup>64</sup> On establishing a prima facie case the burden is shifted to the contestant to introduce sufficient evidence to rebut it<sup>65</sup>

Action in nature of appeal from probate In jurisdictions where statutory proceedings to contest a will after probate are in the nature of an appeal from probate, as discussed infra § 332, and in which the burden of proof is on the proponent as defendant, as considered supra subdivision b (2) of this section, in order to make a prima facie case there must be proof by the proponent of due execution, as discussed infra § 386, and testamentary capacity,<sup>66</sup> whether or not the will is attacked on the ground of incapacity<sup>67</sup> On the establishment of a prima facie case by the proponent the burden is shifted to the contestant to produce evidence to the contrary,<sup>68</sup> but the burden of proof does not shift, as discussed supra subdivision b (2) of this section.

Proof that the testator was addicted to the habitual use of intoxicating liquors to such an extent that he was occasionally drunk does not place the burden on the proponent to show freedom from incapacitating intoxication at the time of execution, but such burden rests on the contestant who asserts such incapacity.<sup>77</sup>

§ 35. Unjust or Unnatural Disposition

Subject to some exceptions, the fact that a will may be unnatural, unfair, or unjust creates of itself no presumption that the testator was incompetent at the time of its execution. According to some decisions, however, where a will is an unnatural one it is the duty of the proponent on the probate of the will to give some reasonable explanation of its unnatural character.

The fact that a will may be unnatural, unfair, or unjust creates of itself no presumption that the testator was incompetent at the time of its execution.<sup>78</sup> No presumption of mental incapacity arises from the fact that the will makes an unequal distribution of property among the next of kin,<sup>79</sup> or that it gives property to persons other than the natural objects of the testator's bounty.<sup>80</sup> Any departure from the usual course in which a person prompted by ordinary instincts and natural impulses would have his property go is presumed to have been made by the testator because of reasons rationally conceived which were satisfactory to him.<sup>81</sup> It has been held, however, that a will may be so unjust or unnatural that no presumption of testamentary capacity will arise.<sup>82</sup> Where the disposition is so gross or ridiculous as to give rise to a presumption of insanity, the rule that there is no presumption of mental weakness from the fact that a will may be unnatural, unfair, or unjust does not apply.<sup>83</sup> Where a testator, who is shown to be mentally ill, designates as beneficiaries persons but remotely related to him, or names occasional or incidental friends or acquaintances as beneficiaries, an inference that mental illness contributed to the unnatural disposition will arise.<sup>84</sup>

Burden of proof On the probate of a will the fact that the will is unnatural does not shift the burden to the proponent.<sup>85</sup> According to some decisions, however, where a will is an unnatural one

Devise to religious organizations

Testatrix' will devising entire estate to three religious organizations, and refusing to devise any of estate to grandchildren, was perfectly natural, so that law would presume testamentary capacity in testatrix, where testatrix had not seen her children for more than 20 years, had only heard from them occasionally and not at all during the last four years of her life, her daughters were dead, her sons-in-law had remarried, her son had ignored her since boyhood, and grandchildren, with exception of two of them when they were quite small, had never seen her

it is the duty of the proponent on the probate of the will to give some reasonable explanation of its unnatural character.<sup>86</sup>

§ 36. Prior or Habitual Insanity and Lucid Intervals

When it is shown that a testator has been insane and that his insanity was of a constant, and not a temporary, character, a presumption of continued insanity up to the time of the making of the will attaches, and the burden is on the proponent to show a general restoration to sanity, or that the will was executed during a lucid interval.

Under general rules, discussed in Evidence § 124, when it is shown that a testator has been insane and that his insanity was of a general, fixed, progressive, and habitual, and not of a temporary, character, a presumption of continued insanity up to the time of the making of the will attaches.<sup>87</sup> However, no presumption of continuity exists where the insanity of the testator is the result of a temporary cause.<sup>88</sup> Even proof of insanity without evidence of its continuity down to the date of the execution of the will does not render one incapable of executing his will or destroy the validity thereof.<sup>89</sup> Although a testator may be mentally unfit, the circumstances connected with the execution of the will may raise a presumption that it was made during a lucid interval.<sup>90</sup>

Burden Where, on the probate of a will, a general and fixed condition of insanity is shown to have existed so as to raise a presumption of continued testamentary incapacity, the burden is on the proponent to show a general restoration to sanity<sup>92</sup> or that the execution of the will was accomplished during a lucid interval.<sup>93</sup> In order for the burden

Where testatrix was, prior to execution of will, suffering from pyelonephritis, an infection of the kidneys which could produce toxemia and toxic psychosis, the temporary derangement was one which admitted of rational periods, and in view of fact that she did have rational periods it would be presumed that will was written during one such period to rest on the proponent, the contestant must establish habitual and fixed insanity<sup>94</sup> When there is a material conflict in the evidence, the general burden of showing insanity at the time of execution remains on the contestant in some jurisdictions<sup>95</sup>

in lunacy finds a lucid interval the law implies a capacity to make a will during such lucid interval.<sup>8</sup> An adjudication of testator's incompetency to manage his property and the appointment of a guardian under some statutes raise a presumption of testamentary incapacity,<sup>9</sup> but such an adjudication under other statutes raises no such presumption.<sup>10</sup>

Presumption as to past insanity. The presumption of incapacity arising from an adjudication of mental incompetence and the appointment of a guardian does not relate back to a time antedating the proceeding.<sup>11</sup>

Drunkenness. It has been held that the appointment of a guardian because of intoxication does not create a presumption of mental incapacity.<sup>12</sup> A commitment to a state hospital for drunkenness raises no presumption that the habit persisted thereafter.<sup>13</sup>

Mental disorder. A prior adjudication of mental disorder bordering on insanity is merely evidence to rebut the presumption of sanity.<sup>14</sup>

by the verdict in incompetency proceedings, which found the deceased mentally competent, may be rebutted<sup>15</sup> by proof of a change in the testator's mental condition between the time he was declared competent and the time when the will was executed.<sup>16</sup>

b. Burden

Where by a prior adjudication a testator is declared to be insane, weak-minded, or unable to manage his property, the burden is on the proponent to establish testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the will.

Where by a prior adjudication a testator is declared to be insane,<sup>17</sup> weak-minded,<sup>18</sup> or unable to manage his property,<sup>19</sup> the burden is on the proponent to establish testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the will. Where there is no adjudication of mental incompetency there is no presumption created such as to shift the burden to the proponent.<sup>20</sup> It has been held, however, that the fact of the creation of a presumption of the continuance of mental incapacity does not change the statutory duty of the contestant to go forward with the evidence.<sup>21</sup>

§ 38. Delusions and Monomania

Where the fact that the testator has been subject to an insane delusion is established, a will should be regarded with great distrust, and every presumption should, in the first instance, be made against it. As a general rule the burden is on the contestant to prove the existence of insane delusions or monomania, and that the will made was a result thereof.

Where the fact that the testator has been subject to an insane delusion is established, a will should be regarded with great distrust, and every presumption should, in the first instance, be made against it.<sup>22</sup> The presumption becomes additionally strong where the will is one in which natural affection and the claims of near relationship have been disregarded.<sup>23</sup>

While there is authority to the contrary,<sup>24</sup> on the probate of a will the burden is on the contestant to prove the existence of insane delusions or monomania,<sup>25</sup> and that the will made was a result thereof.<sup>26</sup> The contestant must show that the delusions had no existence in fact<sup>27</sup> and that there was no evidence of any fact on which the belief could be founded.<sup>28</sup> Proof of an insane delusion by the opponent of the will shifts the burden to the proponent to prove that the disposition by will was not affected by the insane delusion.<sup>29</sup>

In an action to set aside a will or the probate thereof the burden is on contestant to prove insane delusions,<sup>30</sup> and that they affected the disposition of the testator's property.<sup>31</sup> The contestant must prove that there was no evidence of any fact on which the belief could be based.<sup>32</sup> When the contestant makes a prima facie case the burden of evidence, not the burden of proof, shifts to the proponent to show the existence of some such evidence or information.<sup>33</sup> Proof that the testator was a monomaniac requires defendant to adduce only sufficient evidence to prevent the preponderance from being in favor of plaintiff.<sup>34</sup>

Where physical incapacity at the time of the execution of the will is shown, it is incumbent on the proponent to show the existence of testamentary capacity at that time.<sup>46</sup> However, where the testator's physical condition is not such as to render him habitually incompetent, the burden of proof is on the contestant to show testamentary incapacity at the time of executing the will<sup>47</sup> The fact that the testator was of extreme old age cannot be deemed as casting an additional burden of proof on the proponent<sup>48</sup>

§ 40. In General

In will contests involving the question of testamentary capacity, although the evidence is permitted to take a wide range, and every fact throwing light on the issue is admissible, the evidence must be material in order to be admissible.

In will contests involving the question of testamentary capacity, the evidence is permitted to take a wide range<sup>49</sup> covering a long space of time in each direction<sup>50</sup> How wide a range is permissible in a particular case depends on the character of the alleged unsoundness of mind and other circumstances, and rests largely in the discretion of the trial court<sup>51</sup> The evidence must relate to the date of the execution of the will<sup>52</sup> Every fact throwing light on the issue is admissible<sup>53</sup> However, evidence on the question of testator's capacity must be material<sup>54</sup> and not hearsay<sup>55</sup> or rumors<sup>56</sup> Capacity may be shown by evidence that the testator was "rational"<sup>57</sup> Incapacity may be shown by evidence

§ 41. Suicide of Testator

Evidence of suicide on the part of the testator is admissible to prove testamentary incapacity

The fact that a testator committed suicide is admissible to prove testamentary incapacity<sup>59</sup>

§ 42. Hereditary Insanity

On the issue of insanity, evidence of the facts of insanity in the testator's family, and of its inheritable nature, are admissible

Under general rules, considered in Insane Persons § 5, on questions of sanity, proof of hereditary tendency is competent,<sup>60</sup> and it may be shown that other members of the testator's family were afflicted with insanity,<sup>61</sup> or with a mental disease like that of the testator and of a nature to be inherited,<sup>62</sup> but only after direct proof of the testator's insanity has been offered.<sup>63</sup> Evidence of a nonhereditary mental affliction of a member of testator's family has been held inadmissible<sup>64</sup>

§ 43. Habits and Reputation; Use of Intoxicants

Evidence of the habits of the testator is admissible on the issue of testamentary capacity, but evidence as to his reputation for sanity or insanity is inadmissible

Use of intoxicants Evidence that the testator habitually used intoxicating liquors<sup>68</sup> or narcotics<sup>69</sup> is admissible on the issue of testamentary capacity Exclusion of evidence that the testator was drunk on a particular occasion is not error<sup>70</sup> Where a will is contested on the ground of insanity, proponent may show that the insanity was temporarily caused by the use of intoxicants and that at the time of execution the testator was not intoxicated<sup>71</sup>

§ 44. Unjust or Unnatural Disposition

Evidence with respect to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the will is admissible on the question of testamentary capacity, such evidence includes the value of the estate, as well as the financial condition of legatees and of those relatives who are not beneficiaries.

Evidence with respect to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the provisions of a will is admissible<sup>72</sup> In order to prove testamentary capacity, it may be shown that according to the circumstances, the provisions of the will are reasonable and just<sup>73</sup> In order to establish incapacity, it may be shown that the will is unnatural, unjust, or unreasonable<sup>74</sup> If there are provisions of the will which might appear, without explanation, to be unnatural or inequitable, it is proper to rebut any inference of incapacity that might be drawn therefrom<sup>75</sup>

Value of testator's estate On the issue of the reasonableness of a will, evidence is admissible as to the value of the testator's estate<sup>76</sup> at the time of the execution of the will,<sup>77</sup> but not as of the time of death<sup>78</sup> Evidence of property not disposed of by the will is also admissible<sup>79</sup>

Reasons for disposition Where a testator makes an apparently unnatural disposition of his property, testamentary capacity may be shown by evidence of the reasons for the disposition made,<sup>80</sup> and of which the testator had knowledge<sup>81</sup> Thus, it may be shown that the testator in his lifetime advanced certain money or property to the persons neglected in the will,<sup>82</sup> that the testator considered such persons to be bad,<sup>83</sup> or that the testator disliked those neglected in his will,<sup>84</sup> or had great affection for those to whom he devised his property to the exclusion of the natural objects of his bounty<sup>85</sup>

Financial condition of heirs and legatees On the question whether a will was reasonable, it may be shown that the natural objects of the testator's bounty were in poor financial circumstances,<sup>86</sup> provided it is shown that the testator at the time of executing the will was aware of their condition,<sup>87</sup> but such evidence is inadmissible where the testator had mistakenly believed the other's financial condition to be good<sup>88</sup> Evidence of the good financial condition of the beneficiaries of the will is admissible to prove incapacity,<sup>89</sup> if it appears that the testator had knowledge of such fact<sup>90</sup> Evidence of the financial condition of certain persons not shown to have had any claim on the testator's bounty is inadmissible<sup>91</sup> Capacity may be shown by the fact that those neglected in the will who were the natural objects of a testator's bounty were in a good financial condition<sup>92</sup>

§ 45. Adjudication as to Insanity and Guardianship

Although evidence of the appointment of a conservator for the testator or of an adjudication of insanity prior to the execution of the will is admissible, there is a conflict of authority on the admissibility of evidence of an adjudication of insanity after the execution of the will.

decisions the record of an adjudication of lunacy<sup>95</sup> or of mental unsoundness in a proceeding to set aside an instrument executed by the testator<sup>96</sup> subsequent to the execution of the will is inadmissible, at least where the statute regulating inquiries into insanity makes no provision for retroactive findings<sup>97</sup> Likewise, an adjudication after the execution of a will that the testator was incompetent to make a deed has been held inadmissible<sup>98</sup> The appointment of a conservator prior to the execution of a will has been held admissible<sup>99</sup> and inadmissible<sup>1</sup>

Where a restoration of the testator's sanity has been declared prior to the date of execution, a former adjudication of incompetency to manage his affairs is inadmissible<sup>2</sup> Evidence of an appointment of a guardian over the testator subsequent to the execution of the will has been held admissible on the issue of testamentary capacity<sup>3</sup> at the time of the appointment of a guardian<sup>4</sup> When there is testimony tending to show that the mental condition of the testator has not changed between the date of execution and the adjudication, the adjudication, although later in time, is admissible on the issue of testamentary capacity at the date of execution<sup>5</sup> However, according to other decisions, the appointment of a guardian<sup>6</sup> or conservator<sup>7</sup> after the date of execution is inadmissible

Drunkenness A commitment to a hospital for drunkenness prior to the execution of a will has been held admissible<sup>8</sup>

Findings of unsoundness of mind in an action brought by the guardian on behalf of the testator are inadmissible where the parties to the action are not the same as those to the will contest, and the pleadings in the action did not present the issue of soundness of the testator's mind<sup>9</sup>

Adjudication of sanity. Evidence that the testator was declared sane prior to the execution of the will is competent<sup>10</sup> Evidence that a testator, subsequent to the execution of a will, was adjudged of sound mind on an inquisition of lunacy<sup>11</sup> or in guardianship proceedings<sup>12</sup> is admissible

Dismissal of insanity proceeding The finding of a court dismissing an application to have the testator adjudged an incompetent is admissible<sup>13</sup>

§ 46. Insane Delusions, Monomania, and Peculiar Belief or Opinion

On the question of testamentary capacity, it is proper to show that the testator had insane delusions, but a belief in certain doctrines or religions may not be shown.

On the question of testamentary capacity, it is proper to show that the testator had insane delusions,<sup>14</sup> and for this purpose evidence that the particular beliefs claimed to be insane delusions were groundless is admissible<sup>15</sup> Evidence of an insane delusion must approximate the date of the will<sup>16</sup> Evidence for the purpose of showing that a particular belief of the testator conformed to the facts and was not an insane delusion is admissible,<sup>17</sup> provided it is shown that the testator had knowledge of such facts on which to base the belief<sup>18</sup> Such evidence, in order to be admissible, must have a tendency to prove the foundation for the testator's belief<sup>19</sup>

§ 47. Physical Condition and Mental Derangement Therefrom; Age

Evidence of the testator's physical condition and of his age are admissible on the issue of testamentary capacity

On the issue of testamentary capacity, evidence of the physical condition<sup>23</sup> and of the age<sup>24</sup> of the testator is admissible However, where a guardian is appointed for the testatrix after the execution of the will, solely on the allegation and finding of physical incapacity, such appointment is not evidence of mental incapacity<sup>25</sup>

§ 48. Circumstances of Execution

It is proper to show the circumstances attending the execution of the will on the issue of testamentary capacity.

On the issue of testamentary capacity, it is proper to show the circumstances attending the execution of the will,<sup>26</sup> such as the words and conduct of the testator at the time,<sup>27</sup> which are of more or less weight according to the circumstances, as considered infra § 69

§ 49. Source of Testator's Property

There is a conflict of authority on the admissibility of evidence as to the source of testator's property disposed of by the will.

The source from which the property disposed of by will came into the testator's possession has been held admissible<sup>28</sup> and inadmissible<sup>29</sup>

§ 50. Mental Condition Prior and Subsequent to Execution

Evidence of the testator's mental condition either before or after the execution of the will, but near that date, may, depending on the circumstances of each case, be material and admissible.

Although a testator's capacity to make a will is to be determined by his condition at the time of its execution, as considered supra § 5, evidence of his capacity near that date either before or after execution may, depending on the circumstances of each case, be material and admissible,<sup>30</sup> especially

Embracing disliked religion

In proceeding to contest will on ground of lack of testamentary capacity, evidence that testatrix in latter months of her life embraced a religion which had been an anathema to her for years, was admissible, since such a change without any explanation or reason therefor may be some evidence of lack of mental capacity

No general rule exists as to the period within which evidence of testamentary capacity is to be limited,<sup>35</sup> but the matter rests very largely within the discretion of the trial court according to the circumstances of the particular case<sup>36</sup> While it has been said that much latitude should be allowed in the admission of this evidence,<sup>37</sup> such evidence must be sufficiently near in point of time to aid in determining the testator's condition at the time of execution,<sup>38</sup> and if the evidence is too remote in point of time, it may be excluded<sup>39</sup> Where the evidence tends to show that insanity developed mentary intentions prior or subsequent to the execution of the will

On the issue of testamentary capacity, evidence is admissible of the testator's declarations of his testamentary intentions prior or subsequent to the execution of the will.<sup>71</sup> Evidence of declarations of the testator as to his testamentary intentions made before or after the date of the will is admissible to prove capacity,<sup>72</sup> or, in connection with other evidence of incapacity,<sup>73</sup> such evidence is admissible to prove mental unsoundness to execute a will.<sup>74</sup> Evidence is admissible to prove erroneous statements in a will that the testator had advanced to legatees the sums designated.<sup>75</sup> Since the admission of such evidence is largely discretionary with the trial court, it may exclude remote declarations which occurred prior<sup>76</sup> or subsequent<sup>77</sup> to the time of execution.

In will contest on ground of mental incapacity of testatrix, trial court has duty of weighing and giving effect to opinions of friends, relatives, and attending physician as to whether testatrix was of sound and disposing mind and was capable of understanding purpose or nature of business being transacted and knew what was being done when will was made

The same substantial proof of testamentary capacity is required in the case of a codicil merely appointing an executor as in the case of a codicil disposing of the assets of the testator.<sup>99</sup> Evidence tending to prove testamentary capacity may be direct<sup>1</sup> or circumstantial.<sup>2</sup>

According to some decisions, on the probate of a will incapacity must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence.<sup>3</sup> Incapacity need be established only to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury.<sup>4</sup> Under other authorities proof of incapacity on probate must be convincing,<sup>5</sup> clear and convincing,<sup>6</sup> compelling,<sup>7</sup> clear and strong,<sup>8</sup> clear and strong or compelling,<sup>9</sup> or clear, convincing, and satisfactory,<sup>10</sup> and a mere preponderance is insufficient,<sup>11</sup> and so are opinions or suspicions not based on evidence.<sup>12</sup> It has also been held that on probate incapacity must be clearly established,<sup>13</sup> in a positive manner,<sup>14</sup> by substantial evidence,<sup>15</sup> by the manifest weight of the evidence,<sup>16</sup> or by testimony sufficient to sustain a reasonable inference that the testator was incompetent,<sup>17</sup> and a verdict that a will is invalid for lack of testamentary capacity must be supported by the testimony as a whole.<sup>18</sup> Proof of incapacity must be irresistible.<sup>19</sup> Where the attack on the will is based on both mental incapacity and undue influence, the evidence is not required to be as convincing as where only a charge of mental incapacity is made.<sup>20</sup> The degree of proof needed to prove incapacity depends on the type of insanity from which testator was suffering <sup>21</sup>

In an action to set aside the will or revoke the probate thereof it has been held that the proof of incapacity must preponderate,<sup>22</sup> and it is not sufficient if it merely raises a doubt as to testator's capacity <sup>23</sup> According to other decisions evidence of incapacity must be strong,<sup>24</sup> substantial,<sup>25</sup> clear,<sup>26</sup> or cogent, satisfactory, and convincing,<sup>27</sup> and a citizen should not be deprived of the right to dispose of property by will on slight, remote, and wholly unsubstantial and nonprobative testimony <sup>28</sup> Evidence against the will must outweigh both the evidence for the will and the presumption arising from the probate court order admitting the will to probate <sup>29</sup> In weighing the sufficiency of the contestant's case the testimony of the proponent's witnesses must be taken into account <sup>30</sup> It must be shown that the mental incapacity of the testator was of such a nature as to affect his testamentary capacity <sup>31</sup>

Testimony as to testamentary capacity must be based on facts sufficiently definite to permit a witness to be able to give a correct opinion <sup>32</sup> Incapacity to make a will may be established by circumstantial evidence,<sup>33</sup> and need not be proved by direct evidence <sup>34</sup> Incapacity may be shown by many witnesses, testifying as to slight circumstances, which although inconsequential when standing alone, present convincing proof when taken together <sup>35</sup> The mere act of making a will is some evidence as an assertion of capacity <sup>36</sup> Where a will appears to be a rational act performed in a rational manner, the presumption of capacity and such apparently rational act amount to evidence of testamentary capacity <sup>37</sup>

Proof that the testator thoroughly understood the character and extent of his property, the natural objects of his bounty, and what disposition he was making of the property is sufficient to establish testamentary capacity <sup>38</sup> Lack of testamentary capacity may be proved by evidence of any one of three

Weight and sufficiency, as affecting testamentary capacity, of evidence relating to

Natural objects of testator's bounty see infra § 62 b

Understanding as to property see infra § 73

Evidence held sufficient

(1) To establish that testator was capable of knowing extent of his property and natural objects of his

facts, namely, that the testator did not have mental capacity sufficient to know the extent of his property, or sufficient to know and comprehend in a general way the natural objects of his bounty, or sufficient to know the distribution of his estate that he wished to make,<sup>39</sup> and in order to prove that testator did not have testamentary capacity, any one of those facts must be established,<sup>40</sup> but if the cumulative effect of all the evidence is such as to leave no doubt in any juror's mind that at least one of such facts was established, then testamentary capacity has been established even though there would not be unanimous concurrence in the findings as to the evidentiary facts<sup>41</sup>

Testamentary incapacity is not sufficiently proved by evidence merely showing that a testator made a will instead of permitting his property to pass under the statutes of descent and distribution,<sup>42</sup> that the testator could not read or write English,<sup>43</sup> that he violated dict restrictions,<sup>44</sup> or that the will was dated several days prior to the date on which it was actually executed<sup>45</sup> Testimony tending to show feebleness of intellect is not in itself sufficient to establish lack of testamentary capacity unless it was so great as to render the testator incapable of appreciating the nature and consequences of his act<sup>46</sup> Mere proof of mental derangement or even of insanity in a medical sense is not sufficient to invalidate a will, but the contestant is required to go further and prove either such a complete mental degeneration as denotes utter incapacity to know and understand those things which the law prescribes as essential to the making of a will, or the existence of a specific insane delusion which affected the making of the will in question<sup>47</sup> The claimed infirmities of mind or body must be shown to have had a direct bearing on the testamentary act, and the evidence must establish the fact that the deceased devised or bequeathed his property in a manner which, except for the claimed infirmities, he would not have done<sup>48</sup>

The fact that a nonattesting witness who has testified that the testator was incompetent to make a will did business with him about the time the will was made and took his acknowledgment to important contractual papers bears directly on the credibility of the testimony.<sup>49</sup>

Attending physicians and nurses In determining the mental capacity of the testator, great weight is to be attached to testimony of attending physicians<sup>50</sup> Strong testimony is required to overcome it,<sup>51</sup> and it may not lightly be brushed aside

§ 61. Intoxication, Habitual Drunkenness, and Use of Drugs

Testamentary incapacity is not established by mere proof of the testator's use of intoxicants or drugs, although incapacity is established if the use of intoxicants or drugs deprives the testator of the requisite mentality for the execution of a will

Testamentary incapacity is not established by mere proof of the testator's use of intoxicants<sup>72</sup> or drugs,<sup>73</sup> and proof that as a result of chronic alcoholism testator had sustained loss of memory and impairment of other mental faculties does not establish incapacity to make a will.<sup>74</sup> Incapacity is established, however, if the use of intoxicants or drugs deprives the testator of the requisite mentality for the execution of a will.<sup>75</sup>

§ 62. Mode of Disposition of Property

- a. In general
- b. Unjust or unnatural will

a. In General

On the question of testamentary capacity, the contents of the will are to be considered, and the fact that the provisions of the will are just and reasonable is evidence of capacity requiring strong evidence of mental incapacity to nullify the will

On the question of testamentary capacity, the contents of the will are to be considered,<sup>79</sup> although the fact that the will is ungrammatical or inaccurate does not of itself establish mental incapacity to execute a will<sup>80</sup> The fact that the provisions of a will are just and reasonable is evidence of capacity,<sup>81</sup> especially where written by the testator,<sup>82</sup> or where other evidence on the issue is unsatisfactory<sup>83</sup> Where the will is just and reasonable, it will require strong evidence of mental incapacity to nullify it<sup>84</sup> Evidence that the testator fully and completely understood the disposition which he wanted to make and the persons to whom the property was to be devised and the amounts each was to receive is sufficient to prove capacity<sup>85</sup>

b. Unjust or Unnatural Will

The fact that the will is unjust or unnatural does not of itself establish testamentary incapacity, but it is a circumstance which may be considered in connection with other evidence, and which may have weight in determining the capacity of the testator, and an unnatural or unjust disposition coupled with other evidence indicating incapacity may justify a verdict against the will.

Since a person may dispose of his property by will in such manner as he chooses, the fact that the will is unjust or unnatural does not of itself establish testamentary incapacity,<sup>86</sup> as where the testator disinherits relatives,<sup>87</sup> or makes an unequal division executed will, even though he had been committed to an institution to break him of the habit, and such treatment did not have the desired effect

Bequest to previously disinherited son

(1) Act of testatrix, who had executed an earlier will disinheriting her only son and child, in executing a new will giving her estate to her son, was merely evidence tending to show that testatrix was mentally competent to execute the new will, and was required to be considered in light of all other evidence

Okl—Brummett v King, 251 P 2d 1062, 207 Okl 607

(2) Where beneficiary of earlier will, in which testatrix disinherited her son and only child, and testatrix had been closely associated in business and in their personal lives, and had lived together for a number of years until testatrix' health became too bad, and relation between testatrix and son had been strained, and son had been separated from testatrix since early childhood, act of testatrix in executing a new will giving her estate to son was not strong evidence that at time of execution of new will testatrix was mentally competent to do so

of property among his heirs<sup>88</sup> The fact that a will is unjust or unnatural is a circumstance which may be considered<sup>89</sup> in connection with other evidence,<sup>90</sup> and which may, according to the circumstances, have weight in determining the capacity of the testator,<sup>91</sup> but it is not to be considered until doubt as to the testator's capacity to make a will has been first created by other evidence<sup>92</sup> An unnatural or unjust disposition coupled with other evidence indicating incapacity may justify a verdict against the will<sup>93</sup> Where there is an unaccountable gross inequality, there should be clear and satisfactory proof of capacity<sup>94</sup> In determining the weight to be given, the controlling motives influencing the testator should be taken into consideration,<sup>95</sup> and, when there appears a sufficient reason for the disposition, the fact that the will is apparently unnatural is of no consequence<sup>96</sup>

What is unjust or unnatural will Whether a will is natural or unnatural is a question to be determined in each case as warranted by the facts<sup>97</sup> The unnaturalness or want of equity of a will is not to be deemed as self evident on the face thereof<sup>98</sup> In determining whether a will is unnatural the history of the testator's family is to be considered, and the moral equities and obligations appearing therefrom<sup>99</sup> A will is unnatural only when it is contrary to what the testator from his known views, feelings, and intentions would have been expected to make<sup>1</sup> When it is in accordance with such views, it is not unnatural, however much it may differ from the ordinary actions of men in similar circumstances<sup>2</sup>

§ 63. Lucid Intervals

Where habitual insanity on the part of the testator is proved so as to raise a presumption of its continuance, clear and convincing proof is required to establish the execution of the will during a lucid interval, and it is not sufficient to show merely a cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder

Although proof that testator suffered from a mental condition which was progressive and for which there could not be any permanent restoration of mental capacity does not conclusively establish that there could not be periods of testamentary capacity in the legal sense,<sup>3</sup> where habitual insanity on the part of the testator is proved so as to raise a presumption of its continuance, clear and convincing proof is required to establish the execution of the will during a lucid interval<sup>4</sup> The evidence should be as strong and demonstrative of such fact as when the object of such proof is to show insanity<sup>5</sup> It is not sufficient to show merely a cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder, but a restoration of the faculties of the mind sufficient to enable the testator to judge of his act must be established<sup>6</sup> It is incumbent on the proponent to prove the existence of a lucid interval at the very time the will was executed<sup>7</sup> Mere proof of a subsequent lucid interval is insufficient<sup>8</sup> When an insane person writes his own will in his natural manner, and the provisions are sensible, proper, and judicious, the will itself proves that it was written during a lucid interval<sup>9</sup>

§ 64. Adjudication as to Insanity and Guardianship

A judgment in proceedings for the purpose of adjudicating the mental status of a person is not conclusive evidence on the question of such person's incompetency for the purpose of testamentary disposition, although an adjudication of insanity or of unsoundness of mind and the appointment of a guardian may be prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity

effect that an adjudication of insanity or imbecility does not make a prima facie case of testamentary incapacity,<sup>11</sup> other authority holds that an adjudication of insanity or lunacy of a testator is prima facie evidence of the want of testamentary capacity,<sup>12</sup> but not conclusive<sup>13</sup> An adjudication of insanity is conclusive only as to the time of the inquisition, and not anterior or subsequent thereto,<sup>14</sup> but clear and convincing proof that capacity existed at the time the will was executed is required to overcome the prima facie presumption of lack of testamentary capacity arising from a prior adjudication of insanity,<sup>15</sup> and that character of proof may not be supplied by indulgence in conjecture, surmise, or speculation<sup>16</sup> The prima facie effect of such an adjudication is overcome by evidence that for many years following the adjudication and prior to the execution of the will the testator acted normally<sup>17</sup> An adjudication of insanity such as to require treatment is of less probative force on the question of testamentary capacity than an adjudication that the person is incapable of caring for his property and requires a guardian<sup>18</sup>

An adjudication of unsoundness of mind and the appointment of a guardian is prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity,<sup>19</sup> as long as the guardianship continues,<sup>20</sup> but it is not conclusive evidence of incapacity,<sup>21</sup> although the guardianship existed

at the time the will was executed<sup>22</sup> The effect of a guardianship may be overcome by proof that the testator was mentally competent at the time the will was executed,<sup>23</sup> but clear and satisfactory proof is required.<sup>24</sup>

A judgment in proceedings to declare testator incompetent to manage his property or care for himself is evidence of the mental condition of the testator at the time of the adjudication,<sup>25</sup> and is to be considered in the determination of his testamentary capacity,<sup>26</sup> but such evidence is not conclusive proof thereof,<sup>27</sup> and it has been denied that such adjudication is prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity.<sup>28</sup> So, where there was nothing contained in the petition or order appointing a guardian which would indicate that the guardian was being appointed because of the then insanity of the ward, the appointment of the guardian is not evidence that the ward lacked capacity to make a will<sup>29</sup> A finding in a guardianship proceeding that by reason of old age, disease, and physical infirmity an alleged mental incompetent was unable, unassisted, properly to care for himself and his property, and appointing as guardian a person requested by the alleged incompetent is strong evidence of the mental capacity of the alleged incompetent to make a will<sup>30</sup> The fact of guardianship is not conclusive on the issue of testamentary capacity,<sup>31</sup> nor is the appointment of a conservator conclusive<sup>32</sup>

Adjudication of sanity An adjudication that testator was sane and capable of handling his own affairs is weighty evidence of his capacity to make a will a short time thereafter,<sup>33</sup> but not conclusive<sup>34</sup> A discharge from a hospital for the insane is evidence of a change in mental condition,<sup>35</sup> but is not conclusive<sup>36</sup> Restoration to capacity to transact business does not establish testamentary capacity thereafter,<sup>37</sup> and an adjudication in proceedings to set aside a guardianship over testator declaring

(2) To establish that will was product of sound disposing mind, free from, and uninfluenced by, any delusions.

rect in order to prove that the hallucinations and delusions affected the making of the will, but circumstantial evidence may supply the proof, and if the evidence as a whole shows that a testator did not know the extent of his property, or the natural objects of his bounty, his will cannot be sustained <sup>41</sup>

It is not enough to show an erroneous belief on the part of the testator in order to establish an insane delusion,<sup>42</sup> but the evidence must show that the belief had no foundation in fact.<sup>43</sup> It is not for a jury to appraise the impressions which a testator receives from personal conflict and controversy and hold them insane delusions, without knowing all the facts as they appeared to the testator, and not then if there was basis for the impressions, however exaggerated they may be <sup>44</sup> An insane delusion is not established when the court is able to understand how a person situated as the testator was might have believed all that the evidence shows that he did believe and still have been in full possession of his senses <sup>45</sup>

The fact that the testator distributes his property unequally among the natural objects of his bounty because of prejudice or unfriendliness does not establish that he labored under an insane delusion toward relatives as to whom slight provision or no provision at all is made,<sup>46</sup> but it is a circumstance to be considered,<sup>47</sup> and when unexplained tends to show a delusion <sup>48</sup> A mere groundless belief manifested under suddenly aroused emotions and which lacks persistence and continuity affords no evidence of mental delusion.<sup>49</sup>

§ 67 Physical Condition and Mental Derangement Therefrom

Testamentary incapacity is not established by proof of the mere fact that the testator was not in sound health at the time the will was executed, or by evidence of his ailing or weakened physical condition, or that he was suffering from disease, or dying, but the fact that he was in an enfeebled condition at the time of the execution of the will is entitled to consideration, and is of marked significance where there is also evidence tending directly to show his enfeebled mental condition.

Testamentary incapacity is not established by proof of the mere fact that the testator was not in sound health at the time his will was executed,<sup>55</sup> or by evidence of his ailing or weakened physical condition,<sup>56</sup> or that he was dying.<sup>57</sup> Accordingly, incapacity is not established by the mere fact that the testator suffered from disease<sup>58</sup> such as apoplexy,<sup>59</sup> Bright's disease,<sup>60</sup> cancer,<sup>61</sup> cholera,<sup>62</sup> diabetes,<sup>63</sup> disease of the brain,<sup>64</sup> or by the fact that

Testamentary incapacity is not established by evidence that at the time of the execution of the will the testator was advanced in years, even though the will was executed while he was physically infirm or suffering from arteriosclerosis or senile dementia; but proof of the advanced age of the testator in connection with other evidence may aid in supporting a finding of testamentary incapacity.

will was executed while he was physically infirm,<sup>76</sup> or suffering from arteriosclerosis,<sup>77</sup> or senile dementia,<sup>78</sup> and proof of eccentricity incident to old age is not of itself sufficient evidence to show lack of capacity of the testator to make a will.<sup>79</sup> Failure of memory of an aged person does not prove incapacity<sup>80</sup> unless it was so total or so extended as to make incapacity practically certain,<sup>81</sup> and neither does the fact that he required repetition of questions<sup>82</sup> The advanced age of the testator at the time of making the will is a circumstance not to be ignored, however,<sup>83</sup> and in connection with other evidence may aid in supporting a finding of testamentary incapacity,<sup>84</sup> but in the absence of the clearest and most convincing proof of invalidity the courts will uphold the will of an aged person.<sup>85</sup>

Subscribing witnesses When the subscribing witnesses are above suspicion, fully aware of their duty, and competent to perform it, an imputation of incapacity may be sustained only by strong evidence.<sup>88</sup> The fact that an alienist became a witness to the will at the instance of the beneficiaries is not a suspicious circumstance.<sup>89</sup> The mere circumstance that the testator himself did not formulate words of request that others witness the execution of his will does not tend to prove incapacity.<sup>90</sup>

Testator's signature to will. Where the signature of the testator to the will is in his natural hand in conformity with his normal handwriting, it is evidence of mental and physical soundness.<sup>91</sup> If the testator's name is signed differently from his usual mode of writing it, such circumstance may be considered on the question of testamentary capacity,<sup>92</sup> but it is not conclusive that the testator was incompetent.<sup>93</sup> The fact that the signature on the will was scrawling and illegible compared to earlier exemplars of the testator's signature constitutes no substantial evidence of incompetency.<sup>94</sup>

sensible and especially where it provides for a just and reasonable disposition of his property, the fact that it was dictated<sup>95</sup> or written by the testator<sup>96</sup> is evidence of testamentary capacity.

§ 70. Mental Condition Prior and Subsequent to Execution of Will

Before evidence can be held legally sufficient to overthrow the presumption of testamentary capacity, it must be directed to the date of the execution of the will, and while evidence of the testator's mental condition before or after the execution of the will is not conclusive, and weakens as time lengthens in either direction, it is evidence to be weighed and considered.

Before evidence can be held to be legally sufficient to overthrow the presumption of testamentary capacity it must be directed to the date of the execution of the will.<sup>97</sup> Evidence of the testator's mental condition before or after the execution of the will is not conclusive,<sup>98</sup> but serves only as an aid to determine the primary question.<sup>99</sup> The state of the testator's mind at other times can have no probative force except as it may tend to show his mental condition at the time the will was executed.<sup>1</sup>

If decedent knew and understood the business in which he was engaged at the time of execution, evidence as to his state of mind at other times becomes of no importance.<sup>2</sup> Evidence of incompetency before or after the execution of the will is, however, evidence to be weighed and considered,<sup>3</sup> and incapacity may, according to the particular circumstances, be established by evidence of the testator's condition before or after the execution,<sup>4</sup> as where there is no evidence to the effect that testator had normal periods, and it was shown that his condition was one that grew progressively worse.<sup>5</sup> Testimony of witnesses who were present at the time of the execution of the will is not conclusive against testimony of others who saw the testator within a few days of the execution of the will.<sup>6</sup> The remoteness of time bears on the weight of the evidence,<sup>7</sup> which weakens as time lengthens in either direction.<sup>8</sup>

In view of the fact that on proof of general, fixed, and habitual insanity a presumption of continuity is raised, as discussed supra § 36, it is not necessary in case of permanent insanity to prove insanity at the exact time the will was executed.<sup>9</sup> If general insanity is established and the whole evidence leaves the issue in doubt, probate of the will should be denied.<sup>10</sup> Where there is no claim of permanent mental derangement, it must be shown that at the very time the will was executed the testator had not sufficient testamentary capacity.<sup>11</sup> Proof of testator's insanity will justify a finding of incapacity at some prior date only where the condition must have existed for some time, as where the disease is progressive and has arrived at an advanced stage.<sup>12</sup>

§ 71. Transaction of Business and Management of Property

Mere proof that the testator was incapable of transacting ordinary business does not prove testamentary incapacity, but evidence that he was mentally incapable of transacting any kind of business is sufficient to establish incapacity. The fact that the testator transacted his own business and managed his property is strong evidence of testamentary capacity, but not conclusive.

Evidence to support caveat on issue of insanity must ordinarily show either that testator was of unsound mind at time of execution of will or that he was affected with permanent insanity prior to its execution, in which case burden of proof of capacity is shifted to executor

transacting ordinary business does not prove testamentary incapacity,<sup>13</sup> and proof that he was assisted in the management of his business affairs does not indicate lack of testamentary capacity.<sup>14</sup> So, the fact that a testator intrusted his business affairs to the judgment of a confidential agent is not evidence of incapacity.<sup>15</sup> Evidence that the testator was mentally incapable of transacting any kind of business is, however, sufficient to establish incapacity.<sup>16</sup> Capacity to acquire and preserve property is evidence of testamentary capacity, but not conclusive,<sup>17</sup> and the fact that a testator transacted his own business and managed his property is strong evidence of testamentary capacity,<sup>18</sup> but it is not conclusive.<sup>19</sup>

§ 72. Conduct and Declarations of Testator

On the issue of testamentary capacity, the conduct, acts, and statements of the testator, both before and after the execution of the will may be considered, but isolated, detached, trivial, and inconsequential incidents in the life of the testator are of little weight

considered.<sup>20</sup> Written declarations of the testator have far greater weight than testimony of witness as to oral declarations.<sup>21</sup> The acts and words at and nearest to the time of execution may have the greater weight as evidence diminishing in weight as time lengthens in either direction.<sup>22</sup> Conversations, acts, and conduct of the testator subsequent to the execution of the will are not generally of the same relative assistance as are similar matters occurring before the execution of the will.<sup>23</sup> The best proof of insanity is a demonstrated failure of the testator to react to the common facts and events of life.<sup>24</sup> Isolated, detached, trivial, and inconsequential incidents in the life of the testator, especially where their occurrence is remote from the date of the execution of the will, are of little weight on the issue of testamentary capacity.<sup>25</sup> A marked change in the testator's habits and thoughts may indicate incapacity.<sup>26</sup>

In the absence of other evidence to connect it with some phrase of unsoundness of mind to prove incapacity, it is insufficient to show that the testator was changeable,<sup>27</sup> irritable,<sup>28</sup> thrifty,<sup>29</sup> miserly, dishonest, or profane,<sup>30</sup> dissipated,<sup>31</sup> slovenly,<sup>32</sup>

Conduct toward friends and relatives On the issue of testamentary capacity it is proper to consider the conduct of the testator toward friends and relatives.<sup>40</sup> The fact that the testator with or without reason disliked his relatives or friends,<sup>41</sup> or even his wife,<sup>42</sup> or did not talk to certain relatives,<sup>43</sup> does not establish testamentary incapacity.

Conformity of will to expressed intentions If a will is made in conformity to a fixed determination entertained and expressed for some time, it is strong proof of capacity,<sup>44</sup> as where the will is in substantial conformity with prior wills.<sup>45</sup> If the will is not in harmony with the testator's expressions of his intended disposition, it may, in connection with other evidence,<sup>46</sup> be considered as evidence of testamentary incapacity.<sup>47</sup> Inconsistency with expressed testamentary intention is not, however, controlling<sup>48</sup> or of great importance,<sup>49</sup> particularly where a valid reason for the change in testamentary intention exists.<sup>50</sup>

insanity depends on the nature of the cruelty, the existence or nonexistence of a cause or reason for cruel acts and the circumstances generally.<sup>51</sup>

Declarations as to capacity A declaration that the testator did not remember anything that occurred during his illness, at which time the will was executed, is not sufficient to prove mental incapacity.<sup>52</sup> Declarations made at a time when the testator was insane, if admissible at all, would possess no weight as proving or tending to prove the truth of the matters declared by him.<sup>53</sup>

§ 73. Understanding as to Property

If a testator cannot comprehend ordinary affairs or is in ignorance of his ownership of property, such facts permit an inference that he is of unsound mind, and the disposition by the testator of property not his own may be considered in connection with other facts tending to impeach his competency in determining his mental capacity.

(2) To show to some extent that belongs to the testator when in fact he did not own it,<sup>56</sup> or merely owned it in part,<sup>57</sup> is not sufficient to show mental incapacity when due explanation for the testator's claim is given.<sup>58</sup> The fact that the testator devised property which he had previously agreed to sell,<sup>59</sup> or which the devisee already owned,<sup>60</sup> does not denote mental incapacity when explained in the light of accompanying circumstances.<sup>61</sup> The disposition by the testator of property not his own may, however, be considered in connection with other facts tending to impeach such competency in determining a testator's mental capacity.<sup>62</sup>

§ 74. Nuncupative Wills

In the case of nuncupative wills much greater strictness is required in proving testamentary intent and capacity than is necessary in the proof of written wills; and capacity must appear by the clearest and most indisputable testimony.

§ 75. Testimony of Attesting Witnesses

- a. Necessity of examining witnesses
- b. Weight accorded testimony

a. Necessity of Examining Witnesses

Except as such testimony may be required by statute, if there is sufficient other evidence to show the testator's competency to execute a will, that fact need not be established by the subscribing witnesses.

If there is sufficient other evidence to show the testator's competency to execute a will, such fact need not be established by the subscribing witnesses to establish its validity<sup>65</sup> so as to warrant admitting the will to probate.<sup>66</sup> Where required by statute, however, before a will may be admitted to probate, the subscribing witnesses must swear that they believed the testator or testatrix to be of sound mind and memory at the time of signing and acknowledging the will.<sup>67</sup> Under such statute the belief as to the testator's capacity is that entertained by the subscribing witnesses at the time the will was executed,<sup>68</sup> so that the will should be admitted to probate, although the subscribing witnesses also testify that since the execution of the will they have come to the conclusion that the testator was not sane when he made the will.<sup>69</sup> The testimony of the witnesses need not be in the words of the statute as long as they declare in legal effect that the testator was of sound mind and memory at the time of execution.<sup>70</sup> In a statutory action to set aside a will after probate where the execution and probate of the will are admitted by the bill and the only issue is the testator's soundness of mind, it is not essential, it has been held, that the subscribing witnesses should be called to prove the capacity of the testator.<sup>71</sup>

Testimony of the subscribing witnesses tending to prove the testator's competency is generally entitled to great weight, and may not lightly be brushed aside or permitted to be outweighed by circumstances which give rise merely to suspicion, but its value depends on the opportunity of the witness for observation, his skill and care in observing, his intelligence, and powers of discernment and memory.

Testimony of the subscribing witnesses tending to prove the testator's competency is to be considered.<sup>72</sup> Courts do not entirely agree as to the weight to be given such testimony.<sup>73</sup> According to some decisions the testimony of the subscribing witnesses is very persuasive,<sup>74</sup> and is entitled to great weight,<sup>75</sup> peculiar weight,<sup>76</sup> great consideration,<sup>77</sup> or great respect<sup>78</sup> Other things being equal, it is the most reliable<sup>79</sup> It may not lightly be brushed aside or permitted to be outweighed by circumstances which give rise merely to suspicion,<sup>80</sup> and strong testimony is required to overcome it<sup>81</sup> The value of the testimony of the subscribing witness is to be determined with reference to the opportunity of the witness for observation, his skill and care in observing, his intelligence, and powers of discernment and memory,<sup>82</sup> but in order to give probative value to his testimony it is not necessary that he catechize the testator at the time of the execution of the will concerning whether he knew what he was doing, what properties he had, who his heirs were, and what disposition he was making of his estate<sup>83</sup>

testatrix lacked comprehension of full extent and nature of her property

In some jurisdictions such testimony is accorded greater weight than that of other witnesses,<sup>84</sup> especially witnesses who were not present at the time of executing the will and who did not see the testator the day of its execution<sup>85</sup> Thus, where expert testimony as to the testator's capacity is in conflict with that of the subscribing witnesses, the testimony of the subscribing witnesses should prevail,<sup>86</sup> particularly where one of the witnesses is a physician who had unusual opportunities for diagnosis, examination, and observation of the testator<sup>87</sup> In other jurisdictions it has no such greater weight,<sup>88</sup> at least, under all circumstances,<sup>89</sup> for example, as to witnesses who had equal or superior opportunities for observation<sup>90</sup> At any rate, the testimony of the subscribing witnesses is not conclusive,<sup>91</sup> except in the absence of countervailing proof,<sup>92</sup> and the subscribing witnesses are not always the best to prove the sanity of the testator.<sup>93</sup>

should be viewed with caution and suspicion,<sup>95</sup> is entitled to little weight,<sup>96</sup> and may be insufficient to overcome the presumption of sanity<sup>97</sup> So testimony of a subscribing witness that he could not say that testator was capable at the time of executing a valid deed or contract has been held insufficient to overcome the presumption of capacity<sup>98</sup> Notwithstanding positive evidence of one or all of the subscribing witnesses that the testator was incompetent, probate will not be denied if testamentary capacity is established by other evidence,<sup>99</sup> and this is true in jurisdictions in which such testimony is accorded considerable weight<sup>1</sup> Testimony of attesting witnesses in conjunction with other evidence against the will may, however, justify a verdict that the testator lacked testamentary capacity.<sup>2</sup>

The rights of beneficiaries under a will purporting to give testator's wife a life estate in land, which testator had previously conveyed to wife in fee simple, with fee in remainder to beneficiaries, in so far as doctrine of "estoppel" was concerned, were to be measured according to rights of testator, and where testator executed a deed conveying land to wife in fee simple and thereafter executed a will, in wife's presence and with her consent, attempting to devise to wife a life estate in land with the fee in remainder to testator's children, and testator was not misled at time of execution of will but had full knowledge respecting deed, testator could not have asserted the doctrine of "estoppel" to divest wife of fee-simple title under deed, and hence the doctrine did not apply to permit children to claim that wife's heirs at law were precluded from claiming any interest in land after wife's death transferred to a trust,<sup>14</sup> or which has passed from him by operation of law,<sup>15</sup> nor can he transfer by will property which he has agreed, by a valid and binding agreement, to devise or bequeath in a certain manner, as discussed infra § 119. A statute authorizing the executor or administrator of a fraudulent grantor to sue to set aside the fraudulent conveyance for the benefit of the grantor's heirs, saving the rights of creditors and purchasers without notice, does not vest the grantor with any additional right to control or dispose of the granted premises, so as to enable him to transfer them by will after the conveyance.<sup>16</sup> A mere wrongdoer who has only color of title cannot pass any estate by will to his devisees.<sup>17</sup>

Possession Where the testator has title, the fact that he does not have possession of the property,<sup>18</sup> either at the time of the execution of the will<sup>19</sup> or at the time of his death,<sup>20</sup> does not render the property inalienable by will. However, where delivery of certain property is essential to the establishment of title in the testator, the lack thereof will prevent such property from passing by the will.<sup>21</sup>

Restriction on power to alienate A valid restriction on the testator's power to sell or dispose of the property does not make it inalienable by his will.<sup>22</sup>

Undivided interest. The owner of an undivided interest in property cannot bequeath or devise the entire property to a third person,<sup>23</sup> nor can such person bequeath or devise a particular item or plot or his interest in a particular item or plot out of the entire property so held.<sup>24</sup> However, one holding such an interest in property can bequeath or devise his own interest,<sup>25</sup> and it has been held that, in case one holding such an interest in property bequeaths the entire property to some third person, the disposition to the extent of the testator's ownership is valid,<sup>26</sup> unless the disposition is so worded as to prevent its being executed in part.<sup>27</sup> cotton by delivery of deed thereto was held not valid "gift causa mortis" because property itself was not delivered and donor had not surrendered all dominion over it, and hence cotton passed under terms of will executed prior to attempted gift. Miss—Gidden v Gidden, 167 So 785, 176 Miss 98.

When transfer effective

Deed reserving possession and rents of land during grantor's lifetime, delivered to grantor's executor with directions to deliver deed to grantee on grantor's death, which was done, was held to vest title in grantee as of date of delivery to executor, precluding disposition of lands by grantor's will.

Where testator was discharged in bankruptcy, any interest he may have had in community property as an heir of deceased mother, and others, which was not claimed to be exempt from forced sale, passed to the trustee in bankruptcy, even though bankruptcy schedule did not list any real property or interest therein as owned or claimed by testator, and therefore, devise of testator's property received no interest in the land.

Distributive shares

Subject to the claims of creditors and to administration expenses, the right of next of kin or legatees to share in the personal property of the decedent may be disposed of before settlement of the estate, so that daughter as sole heir of her mother could by will effectively dispose of her interest in savings bank account standing in the name of her mother, though mother's estate had not been administered prior to daughter's death.

21. Making of will held not constructive delivery

Where deceased's widow during her lifetime was entitled to net income of a trust set up by will, and widow was also residuary legatee, residuary devisee and sole executrix of will, and proof showed that widow, since deceased, never made a physical delivery from deceased's estate to herself as legatee of securities claimed by widow's stepdaughter under widow's will, the making of will by widow did not constitute a "constructive delivery" of securities, so as to establish that securities

§ 77. What Law Governs

The law governing what property may be passed by will is that of the state where realty to be devised is situated, or, in the case of personalty, where the testator is domiciled, and the law at the time of testator's death controls

What law governs the determination of what property may be passed by will depends on the nature of the property to be so transferred<sup>32</sup> Thus, the extent of the power of the testator to dispose of real property must be determined by the law of the state where the land is situated,<sup>33</sup> but the extent of the power of the testator to dispose of personal property is governed by the law of the domicile of the testator regardless of whether the property is situated within his domicile or elsewhere<sup>34</sup> Accordingly, the question of the application of the will of a nonresident testator to include assets originating within the state but now located in the state of the testator's residence is for the courts of the latter state<sup>35</sup>

Time as of which law in force. The law in force at the time of the death of the testator from whom the right arose controls,<sup>36</sup> except that, in respect of community property, the law in force at the time such community property was acquired and not that in force at the time of the wife's death determines whether the wife has a devisable interest therein<sup>37</sup> er it actually does so pass in any case depending on the terms of the will and the intention of the testator, as appears infra § 756

Property partly paid for A general bequest of all the testator's stock in a given railroad company must be construed as including that which is only in part paid for, as well as that which has been fully paid for and certified, since in either case it is stock, belonging to him, and capable of being transferred by his conveyance.<sup>40</sup>

b. Real Property

While the rule is otherwise apart from statute, under statutes to that effect a testator may devise lands acquired after the execution of his will.

Under the provisions of statutes to that effect, a testator may make a devise of lands acquired by him after the execution of the will,<sup>41</sup> whether after-acquired real property will actually pass by devise depending on the terms of the will and the intention of the testator, as discussed infra § 756.

In the absence of, or prior to, statute changing the rule, it has uniformly been held that a devise of lands can operate only on those lands which the testator owned at the time of executing and publishing his will,<sup>42</sup> and that no after-purchased lands can pass under such devise, unless subsequent to the purchase, the devisor republishes his will,<sup>43</sup> and this is so notwithstanding the language of the will may be such as would show clearly the intention of the testator that it should pass<sup>44</sup>

Application of statutes to preexisting wills. In accordance with the general rule that statutes shall not be construed retrospectively, unless, by their express terms or otherwise, such appears to be the manifest intent of the legislature, as discussed in Statutes § 414, such statutes have usually been held inoperative as to wills made before their enactment, although they were enacted before the testator's death<sup>45</sup> There are, however, decisions, which hold, perhaps because of the peculiar wording of the statutes, that the statutes are operative as to wills made before their passage where the testator dies after they go into effect<sup>46</sup> Manifestly, if such statutes contain an express provision to that effect, they will have no application to wills made before their enactment<sup>47</sup> Certainly, the statutes have no application where the testator died before the enactment thereof<sup>48</sup>

Property disposed of and again acquired At common law a will has been held to be inoperative on real estate of which the testator was owner at the time of the making of the will, and afterward sold, repurchased, and died seized<sup>49</sup> This rule, however, has very generally been changed by statute and the prevailing doctrine now is that such property may pass by will.<sup>50</sup>

§ 79. Property Changed in Form

A change in the form of property will not prevent its passing under a general devise or bequest, although it may in some instances prevent its passing under a specific devise or bequest.

Under a general devise or bequest a change, subsequent to the making of the will, in the form of property devised or bequeathed, does not prevent the operation of the provisions of the will, and the property, in its changed form, passes to the devisee or legatee<sup>51</sup>

Specific devise or bequest. In the case of a specific devise or bequest, a change, subsequent to the execution of the will, in the form of the property bequeathed or devised has, in some instances, prevented its passing to the legatee or devisee specified,<sup>52</sup> and, in other instances, it has been held not

§ 80. Equitable Interests, Trusts, and Powers

An equitable interest may be devisable unless it is by its nature nonalienable, and the sole owner of corporate stock has an equitable interest in the corporate property which is devisable

An equitable interest,<sup>54</sup> such as an equity of redemption,<sup>55</sup> or the interest of a beneficiary under a trust,<sup>56</sup> may be devisable, unless it is by its nature nonalienable,<sup>57</sup> or where the beneficiary's interest in the trust terminates at his death <sup>58</sup> The trustee of a personal trust cannot continue it by will,<sup>59</sup> nor can a trustee of an unexecuted trust terminate it by a devise to the beneficiaries,<sup>60</sup> but one taking property in trust as security may pass by will all his rights <sup>61</sup>

An equitable owner in fee of trust property, which trust, by the terms of its creation, ceases at the death of such owner, is entitled to devise it free of the trust <sup>62</sup> Where there is both an estate and a power in the same individual, such individual may elect as to whether he will dispose under the power or devise as owner <sup>63</sup> Where a testator, who holds

land as trustee, and as such has power by his to direct the sale of it by his executors, direct his will that such land shall be sold by his executors along with his own property, the bulk of which given to residuary legatees, who are the same persons as the cestuis que trust under the original trust the executor has a power to sell coupled with a trust or a power coupled with an interest, and the residuary legatees take by devise and not by descent

Corporate property Although there is authority to the contrary,<sup>65</sup> it has been held that the owner of all the stock in a corporation is the owner of an equitable interest in property owned by the corporation, which interest is the subject of devise and pass under his will <sup>66</sup> However, a testator who calls all but a small percentage of the shares of stock corporation cannot devise realty owned by corporation <sup>67</sup>

Since, under a valid contract to purchase land, the vendee is, in equity, the real owner, and the purchase money is treated as a mere encumbrance on the land, as appears in Vendor and Purchaser § 106, this equitable interest which the purchaser has may be devised.<sup>68</sup> So, also, the vendor in a contract of sale,<sup>69</sup> or an option to sell,<sup>70</sup> may devise his interest, and the devisee will take the land subject to the same obligation as the testator, the right of the owner of the equitable title to the land not being affected by the vendor's will.<sup>71</sup> Where, under a valid contract to purchase land, the purchaser holds merely as trustee for another, the vendor and the purchaser cannot rescind the contract and the vendor devise the land to a stranger.<sup>72</sup>

§ 82. Interests under Land Warrants, Certificates for Purchase Money, Etc.

The interest conferred by a land warrant or certificate for the purchase money of public lands is devisable, as is the interest of a homestead entryman.

The interest conferred by a land warrant,<sup>74</sup> or certificate for the purchase money of public lands,<sup>75</sup> or royal proclamation for military services rendered before warrant obtained,<sup>76</sup> is devisable. So one who by statute is entitled to a patent for military services may devise the land, although the patent issues after his death.<sup>77</sup>

Homestead entry An entryman on public lands of the United States in whom the right to a patent has not yet accrued has no interest in the land which can pass by will.<sup>78</sup> Under a homestead act which provides, in effect, that, where a homestead entryman dies before obtaining a patent, his widow, or, if he leaves no widow, his minor children, or, if he leaves neither widow nor minor children, his heirs or devisees, may succeed to his rights as entryman and on compliance with the requirements of the homestead law obtain a patent therefor, a homestead entryman has a devisable interest in the land or in his entry which he can pass by will,<sup>79</sup> and, if he dies before obtaining his patent, leaving no widow or minor children, a devisee to whom he has devised his interest in the homestead succeeds thereto to the exclusion of his heirs and is entitled to a patent on completion of the requirements of the Homestead Act.<sup>80</sup>

Timber culture entry A timber culture entryman under the Timber Culture Act of the United States does not, prior to obtaining his patent, have a devisable interest in the land.<sup>81</sup>

In Texas Where a testator is entitled to an unconditional patent to land at the time of his death, but has not yet received it, the fact that after his death a patent issues to his heirs cannot affect the right of devisees under his will to recover the land.<sup>82</sup> A widow obtained an equity in land sufficient to pass it by devise where she, being entitled as the head of a family to a grant of land, made application therefor, and, by a valid order of survey, land was surveyed and thereby segregated from the public do-

Statute as merely removing common-law ban

A possibility of reverter is a reversionary interest, not created but left undisposed of by will or deed which disposes of other interests in property, and application of statute making possibilities of reverter transferable by will to such interests existing at time of effective date of statute does not change the interest but merely removes the common law ban and permits transfer by will.

Statute held applicable to wills

The statute providing that any interest in land may be conveyed to vest immediately or in future by writing signed and delivered cannot be construed to prohibit alienation by will of a possibility of reverter on ground that statute does not apply to a will and that a will is not a "writing signed and delivered" within statute, since a will is a writing signed under an authorization for delivery upon happening of event which is to vest title in devisee.

Statutory authority

The statutory power of insured to bequeath proceeds of policies payable to estate "to any person whatsoever or for any uses in like manner as he may bequeath any other property or effects" is not to be restricted or denied by technically inharmonious language in policy unless it clearly appears that it was intent of insured and insurer to restrict or destroy such power

Fla—Penn Mut Life Ins Co v Roberts, 162 So 881, 120 Fla 392

Statutory exemption from debts of insured

(1) Statutes exempting the avails of life insurance from the debts of deceased do not limit insured's right to dispose by will of life policies payable to estate, executor, or administrator

Tenn—Malone v Shoffner, 4 Tenn App 538

68 CJ p 500 note 9 [a]

(2) Where, under Florida statute, insured had power to dispose of proceeds of life policies payable to his estate by will free from liability for debts, and insured, by will, provided for payment of proceeds to trustees, when time for widow's election to take dower passed, neither executor, creditors, widow nor children could contest right of trustees, and insurer was required to pay proceeds of policies in accordance with terms of will

US—New York Life Ins Co v Valz, CC A Fla, 141 F 2d 1014

(3) Florida statute exempting proceeds of life policy from attachment, garnishment or any legal process, providing that the proceeds of the insurance may be bequeathed by the insured to any person or for any uses in like manner as he may bequeath or devise any other property, is a statutory recognition not only that insured has a property interest in life policy proceeds, but that when such proceeds are bequeathed they pass by will and not by statute

Va—Capers v White, 81 SE 2d 597, 195 Va 1123

estate or his representatives,<sup>18</sup> the rule has also been held applicable in the case of industrial policies notwithstanding a beneficiary is named,<sup>19</sup> and to other policies designating a beneficiary, where such beneficiary has predeceased the testator,<sup>20</sup> and in any case such disposition in a will is not invalid in so far as the named beneficiary of the policy may elect to take under the will and be bound by it.<sup>21</sup> The power of disposition of the proceeds of an insurance policy is subject to any valid assignment made of the policy,<sup>22</sup> and, in the absence of statutory provisions providing otherwise, to the dower rights of a widow.<sup>23</sup>

While a statute may provide that a life insurance policy shall, in the absence of an agreement or assignment to the contrary, inure to the separate use of the husband or wife and children of said individual, a specific disposition of the insurance proceeds by will constitutes an assignment to satisfy the statutory requirement.<sup>24</sup> The intention to dispose of the proceeds must be expressly declared in clear terms in the will.<sup>25</sup>

§ 87. Property in Which Surviving Husband or Wife Has Interest

While a spouse may devise property as he or she desires, the property or rights of the other spouse cannot be thereby disposed of or impaired. Land owned by the entirety cannot be devised by either spouse.

While a different rule may have prevailed under the common law as to personal property,<sup>26</sup> one spouse cannot by will dispose of the property of the other.<sup>27</sup> Thus, while a husband may devise his property as he desires,<sup>28</sup> such devise is subject to any rights which his wife may have therein, if any,<sup>29</sup> and he cannot cut off her rights by any testamentary disposition he may make.<sup>30</sup> So, also, a husband cannot by his will deprive his widow of her right to a certain share in his estate under statute.<sup>31</sup> Similarly, the wife cannot cut off the husband's rights in her property by testamentary disposition.<sup>32</sup>

A husband who makes advances for improvements on his wife's property, even though he thereby acquires a lien on such property, cannot convert that lien, without further proceedings, into a title to the property, either legal or equitable, which he may devise.<sup>33</sup>

Land owned by entirety Land owned by husband and wife as tenants by the entirety cannot be devised by either of them,<sup>34</sup> and a surviving spouse cannot be deprived of his or her right by the testamentary provisions of the deceased spouse<sup>35</sup> However, both spouses together may by prior agreement make joint testamentary disposition of an estate by the entirety;<sup>36</sup> and by agreement and joint act, the two by will may devise a remainder over after life enjoyment by the surviving spouse<sup>37</sup>

As appears supra § 78 b, under statutes authorizing the passing by will of after-acquired property, a will by either spouse disposing of property held in the entirety will be given effect when the other spouse dies first and the will remains unchanged until the death of the survivor

After divorce or separation. The property of a divorced wife does not pass by the will of her former husband<sup>38</sup> Also, a wife may dispose by will, and deprive her husband of any interest therein, of property set aside to her with full power of disposal, by a separation decree<sup>39</sup> All property rights granted a spouse by a divorce decree vest, on such spouse's death prior to the time when the decree becomes absolute, in his devisees,<sup>40</sup> subject to the statutory limitations of the decree itself and applicable probate procedures<sup>41</sup>

Interest of widow In general, property acquired by the surviving widow by inheritance from her deceased husband is subject to devise by her with the rest of her property<sup>42</sup> Under a statute which provides that a widow who shall marry again cannot alienate real estate held in virtue of her previous marriage, a woman who holds title to land by virtue of her former marriage cannot devise it<sup>43</sup> A widow cannot bequeath specific property which belonged to her husband, the possession of which she obtained as administratrix of his estate, where she never filed an account as such<sup>44</sup> Where a widow, who is the sole devisee under her husband's will, waives her right under the will by failing to probate it, she has no right, title, or interest in his estate under the will which she can bequeath<sup>45</sup> Property which is set aside as a year's support for the benefit of a widow, under statute, vests absolutely in her and she can dispose of any unconsumed portion thereof by her will<sup>46</sup>

that furniture for hotel property was billed to the hotel which stood in wife's name and that some of the invoices were made out to the husband and wife were insufficient, in the absence of any showing of any specific intent, to set up an "estate by the entireties" in such furniture, so as not to be devisable under the wife's will

§ 89. Property Payable or Transferable to Others at Testator's Death

death of the testator may not be disposed of by his will<sup>58</sup> Thus, a life estate is not devisable,<sup>59</sup> nor does a life estate with power to use or dispose of the principal entitle the life tenant to devise such estate or the remaining principal by will<sup>60</sup> However, where an employees' annuity and benefit fund act requires that any refund be paid to the administrator or executor of the deceased employee, the refund is the property of the employee, and will pass as testate property at his death.<sup>61</sup>

IV. WHO MAY TAKE UNDER A WILL, AND RESTRICTIONS ON TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION

§ 91. General Considerations

The right to take property under a will is not a natural right, but is a creature of the law, a privilege accorded by the state

§ 92. — Regulation and Control by State

The right of persons to take under a will is subject to state regulation and control.

The general rule that the right of testamentary disposition is dependent on statute and is subject to regulation and control by the legislature, discussed supra § 3, applies so as to permit the legislature to impose restrictions in respect of the rights of persons named as beneficiaries,<sup>72</sup> and it has been laid down in general terms that the legislature has the exclusive power to designate those whom the testator may make the objects of his bounty.<sup>73</sup> The authority which confers the right to take under a will may impose conditions on it,<sup>74</sup> and, according to some cases, may foreclose or take away the right or privilege entirely.<sup>75</sup> Thus, in some jurisdictions at least, the right to take property under a will exists only by virtue of statute,<sup>76</sup> and is entirely

§ 93. — Objects or Purposes and Beneficiaries

In general, a person who has testamentary capacity may dispose of his property to any person and for any object that is not prohibited by statute, or is not otherwise illegal, immoral, or against public policy.

Subject to the power of the state and the legislature to regulate and control the right, considered supra §§ 3, 92, and to particular limitations imposed by statute, considered infra §§ 97-110, or established rules of law, a person who has testamentary capacity

may dispose of his property in any manner<sup>83</sup> and to any person<sup>84</sup> he may desire, or to any person capable of taking the property,<sup>85</sup> where such disposition is not prohibited by law<sup>86</sup> It is the general rule that, in the absence of some special disability declared by statute, any person may be a legatee or devisee,<sup>87</sup> and this includes those who stood in a fiduciary relationship to the giver<sup>88</sup> In some jurisdictions a resident may not make a testamentary transfer of property to a foreign government<sup>89</sup>

A will may dispose of property for any object that is not illegal, immoral, or against public policy,<sup>90</sup> and it has broadly been laid down that a devise must be sustained unless the object is contrary to settled principles of law or to a statute<sup>91</sup> Thus, a bequest may be valid when for a monument<sup>92</sup> or mausoleum,<sup>93</sup> for the erection of a memorial to the testator and certain of his relatives,<sup>94</sup> for the improvement or construction of highways,<sup>95</sup> for carrying on a business,<sup>96</sup> for payment of an indebtedness which had prescribed,<sup>97</sup> or for other worthy purposes<sup>98</sup> A testator may direct that payment be made from his estate for an autopsy which he has directed be performed on his body on his decease<sup>99</sup>

Testamentary provisions will not be held void as against public policy unless it clearly appears that they were intended to bring about that which is, in morals, bad,<sup>1</sup> and unless they contravene some positive and well defined expression of the settled will of the people of the state or nation, as an organized body politic,<sup>2</sup> and such expression must be looked for, and found in, the constitution, statutes, or judicial decisions of the state or nation<sup>3</sup> The courts, however, will not enforce the payment of bequests which are against public policy<sup>4</sup> Any testamentary disposition will be held void which is against good morals,<sup>5</sup> or which is designed to carry into effect a purpose which the law regards as immoral, illegal, indiscreet, or impolitic<sup>6</sup> Thus, provisions in wills have been held void which tend to disrupt the family,<sup>7</sup> or which provide for payment for the typing, editing, and distribution of papers of the testator which are of no scientific or other

value<sup>8</sup> A testator may not, by will, modify or prevent the application of a federal statute<sup>9</sup>

The incapacity of a legatee to receive a legacy must be pleaded in order to be available<sup>10</sup> Under some statutes testamentary dispositions in favor of a person incapable of receiving are null and void, even though they are disguised under the form of an onerous contract, or made under the name of persons interposed<sup>11</sup>

§ 94. — Date of Capacity

As a general rule, the capacity of a devisee or legatee to take a present vested interest is to be judged as of the time of the death of the testator, and must exist at that time in order for the gift to be valid

The capacity of a devisee or legatee to take a present vested interest is to be judged as of the time of the death of the testator, and must exist at that time<sup>12</sup> Generally, capacity existing at the date of the death of the testator is not affected or destroyed by a prior<sup>13</sup> or subsequent<sup>14</sup> incapacity, or by incapacity for a period intermediate between the making of the will and the death of the testator<sup>15</sup>

Mode of determination

Ordinarily, the decision as to whether a bequest contravenes recognized interests of society rests on determination of whether bequest conflicts with expressions or clear implications of the state's organic law, or its statutes, or judicial decisions, and, in a case of first impression where there are no such guides, a judicial determination of the question becomes an expression of public policy, provided it is so plainly right as to be supported by the general will

The mere fact that the time of distribution is deferred does not prevent the capacity of the beneficiary from being judged as of the date of the death of the testator, where his rights were intended to be fixed and vested at that time.<sup>19</sup> Where, however, the interest given is conditional and not intended to vest until a time subsequent to the testator's death, the date of the actual vesting of the interest is the time for the determination of the capacity of the devisee or legatee.<sup>20</sup>

A statute prohibiting any devise or bequest to a foreign country, subdivision thereof, city or corporation located therein, or to any trustee or agent thereof, enacted after a will is executed and before the death of the testator, will invalidate such a devise or bequest, and the fact that the testator became insane after the execution of the will and prior to the effective date of the statute will not make the statute inapplicable.<sup>21</sup>

§ 95. — Existence of Beneficiary

In general, in order to take by will, the donee or

In general, in order to take by will, the donee or beneficiary must be in existence either at the time of the death of the testator or when the gift would vest under the will.<sup>22</sup> A devise or bequest of property to an estate has been held void on the ground that an estate is not a person or legal entity, capable of taking a devise or bequest,<sup>23</sup> or on the ground that the intention of the testator could not be determined,<sup>24</sup> but other authority has held that such a devise or bequest is not necessarily void, and that it may be made effective where the testator's intent can be determined.<sup>25</sup> A purported gift to a specified person at the death of such person is void.<sup>26</sup>

§ 96. — What Law Governs

The capacity to take testamentary gifts of realty and restrictions on testamentary disposition thereof is governed by the law of the state where the land is situated, but where a gift of personal property is involved, the law of the testator's domicile governs in some jurisdictions and the law of the legatee's domicile in other jurisdictions

Subject to the rules as to what law governs with respect to the capacity of the testator in general, considered supra § 4, and to the validity of testamentary gifts in general, considered infra § 150, and to the capacity of particular persons or entities to take under a will, discussed infra §§ 97-107, there is authority for the view that the extent of the testator's power to dispose of real property<sup>32</sup> and the capacity to take testamentary gifts of real property<sup>33</sup> depend on the law of the jurisdiction in which the land is situated. The rule as to what law governs is not varied by the mere fact that the devise runs to a trustee rather than to beneficiaries directly,<sup>34</sup> or by the fact that the courts of the state where the testator was domiciled have acted first in the matter.<sup>35</sup> However, the courts of the jurisdiction wherein the land is situated, by reason of their ultimate power over lands situated within the jurisdiction, have the jurisdictional authority in a given case to vary the rule and apply the domiciliary law in preference to the lex rei sitae, if they should find compelling reasons to do so,<sup>36</sup> but the rule which normally governs will not be waived merely because the land happens to be of less value than the rest of the property, or because all of the contending parties happen to reside beyond the state of situs.<sup>37</sup>

In respect of the capacity to receive a testamentary gift of personal property, the view has been taken that, under certain circumstances, the law of the domicile of the legatee will govern,<sup>38</sup> but that the testator may control the governing law by express declaration in his will that his testamentary dispositions are to be construed and regulated by the laws of a particular state.<sup>39</sup> Other

Common law

The concept provided in statute having effect of affording residents of other jurisdictions a means of escaping onerous restrictions on testamen-

authority, however, has held that, while the incapacity of a legatee to take, imposed by the laws of the legatee's domicile may, under certain circumstances, prevail everywhere,<sup>40</sup> in general, the law of the testator's domicile governs<sup>41</sup> It has broadly been stated that, in respect of the disposable power over the estate, the law of the domicile of the testator governs<sup>42</sup> A trust created by will may be valid in one state and invalid in another<sup>43</sup>

§ 97. Husband and Wife

- a In general
- b Express restriction on, and recognition of, testamentary power, consent to disposition

a. In General

As a general rule, subject to dower, curtesy, or statutory rights and limitations, a husband or wife may make testamentary disposition of his or her property to the exclusion of the other

As a general rule, subject to dower, as discussed in Dower § 48, curtesy, as discussed in Curtesy §

12 b, and statutory rights and limitations, either husband or wife may make such testamentary disposition of his or her property as he or she sees fit, to the exclusion of the other<sup>44</sup> Thus, under varying statutes a husband, in making testamentary disposition of his estate, may exclude his wife from any part thereof,<sup>45</sup> or from a share of his personal property,<sup>46</sup> and a wife, by will, may deprive her husband of any interest whatsoever in her estate,<sup>47</sup> or in her separate estate,<sup>48</sup> or her real estate,<sup>49</sup> or her personal property<sup>50</sup>

On the other hand, by virtue of express or implied prohibition, the right to defeat by testamentary disposition a surviving spouse's right to a share of the property of a deceased spouse has been denied when the attempted disposition is made by a husband<sup>51</sup> and, in some of the jurisdictions, by a wife<sup>52</sup> This denial has been made in respect of a husband's defeat of his wife's taking a share of his personal<sup>53</sup> or real<sup>54</sup> property, and in respect of a married woman's defeating her surviving husband's right to take a share of her personal<sup>55</sup> or

tary disposition of property imposed by the laws of their domiciles, by declarations in will that testator elects that his disposition shall be construed and regulated by law of New York, was not foreign to the common law but is in substance declaratory of the common-law rule as it previously existed

real<sup>56</sup> property It has been recognized that a husband may not dispose, by will, of items of personal property, which, under statute, are to be set aside for the surviving widow<sup>57</sup>

In general, a testator, by will, may freely dispose of the amount of his property in excess of the statutory share to which his wife is entitled as of right<sup>58</sup> A married woman's will which gives her surviving husband less than what he is entitled to of right under the statute usually is not invalid,<sup>59</sup> it is merely subject to the right of the husband to demand and receive his statutory share,<sup>60</sup> and the fact that the will of the wife does not provide for her husband, as well as the fact that the husband does not consent to the will, does not operate to avoid the will entirely, but simply nullifies it to the extent of the legal right of the husband<sup>61</sup>

Divorce or adultery The right of a spouse to a legacy bequeathed to such spouse by the other is not affected by their separation and divorce<sup>62</sup> Statutory provisions which bar either party to a divorce from any claim to the property of the other refer to claims arising by reason of the marriage relation, and do not prevent a divorced spouse from claiming property bequeathed to such spouse by the other<sup>63</sup> Also, statutory provisions denying to a person who has voluntarily left his or her spouse and lived in adultery all right and interest in the property and estate of such spouse relate only to cases of intestacy, and have no application to a case where testamentary provision has been made by the spouse for his or her offending wife or husband<sup>64</sup>

To married person's intended future spouse. A testamentary disposition by a testator who, at the time of the execution of the will, intended to divorce his wife and marry the beneficiary has been held

not void as against public policy, on the ground that it tended to interfere with, or destroy, an existing marriage, since it was merely an effect, and not a cause, of the contemplated dissolution of the marriage relation<sup>65</sup>

Nature of taking where will purports to give property to surviving spouse. There is authority for the view that, where a testator by his will makes the same provision for his surviving wife as she would take under the laws of the state in the absence of a will,<sup>66</sup> as, for example, where a testator bequeaths and devises to his widow all that portion of his real and personal estate to which she would be entitled under the laws of the state as widow,<sup>67</sup> the widow takes by descent and not by purchase or under the will, and the will is inoperative as to her,<sup>68</sup> and a like rule has been recognized in the case of similar provisions for the benefit of her husband, contained in a will by a married woman<sup>69</sup> The rule is otherwise, however, where the widow takes a different interest under the will from what she would take under the statutes,<sup>70</sup> as, for example, where she receives a larger estate under the will than that given her by the statute of descent,<sup>71</sup> or where she takes an estate in real property different in quality<sup>72</sup>

Necessity for joinder of wife in husband's will A will is not a "conveyance" wherein the wife must join in order to bar her right to take a specified interest in real property as widow<sup>73</sup>

Limitation on testamentary provision for spouse where children living Some statutes place a limitation on the amount of his or her property which a married person may give to the surviving widow or widower where the testator or testatrix has children by a former marriage,<sup>74</sup> or have limited the

What law governs In general, the rights of a surviving spouse are determined by the law in force at the time of the death of the person whose will is under consideration,<sup>76</sup> but a will executed prior to a change of statute in favor of a surviving spouse, without making any provision therein for the testator's wife from whom he was separated, has been held to deprive the wife of any right in his estate <sup>77</sup> The right of a surviving spouse to take real estate against the will of the deceased spouse is governed by the law of the jurisdiction in which the real estate is situated <sup>78</sup>

Forfeiture of legacy

(1) Prior to its repeal in 1918, it was held, under a statute providing that where a person marries a second time, property bequeathed to him by his first wife becomes, by the second marriage, the property of the children of the first marriage, that the children of the first marriage may claim the property, not by inheritance from the deceased parent, but solely because of the second marriage by operation of law

La.—Liquidators of Prudential Savings & Homestead Soc v Langermann, 100 So 55, 156 La. 76

(2) The property by the second marriage became the property of the children of the preceding marriage, and the spouse who married again had only the usufruct of it

La.—Zeigler v His Creditors, 21 So 666, 49 La. Ann 144

(3) Such property was considered in law to be vested in full and perfect ownership in the surviving spouse prior to the second marriage, and alienations of, or incumbrances on, the property by the surviving parent prior to the second marriage did not invalidate or forfeit the title of the third person

La.—Liquidators of Prudential Savings & Homestead Soc v Langermann, 100 So 55, 156 La. 76, overruling Zeigler v His Creditors, 21 So 666, 49 La. Ann 144.

Share spouse entitled to under law of intestate succession

Okl.—Horton v Cronley, 270 P 2d

(2) Validity, sufficiency, operation, and effect of consent of spouse

(1) In General

In numerous jurisdictions, statutes have specifically placed restrictions on the power of testamentary disposition in derogation of the rights of a surviving spouse or have otherwise provided for the protection of such rights

In numerous jurisdictions, statutes have specifically placed restrictions on the power of testamentary disposition in derogation of rights of a surviving spouse or have otherwise provided for the protection of such rights <sup>79</sup> Thus, under varying statutes, unless the surviving spouse consents thereto,<sup>80</sup> a surviving husband or wife is entitled to take and a testator cannot deprive his spouse, by a testamentary disposition, of a specified share or proportion of his estate,<sup>81</sup> or of a definite share or proportion

Commissions as part of share bequeathed

Provisions of trust under will bequeathing to testator's daughter in trust amount equal to third of testator's estate for payment of income to his widow for life, with remainder, on her death, to become part of residuary estate, were not invalid as giving daughter greater than two-thirds share of estate because of her right to commissions on execution of trust and provision that she need not give bond, in view of statutory provisions that such facts should not give testator's surviving spouse absolute right of election to take intestate share of estate

Testamentary disposition by Indian

(1) Where the authority to do so is granted by a federal statute, a state statute prohibiting a married person from making a testamentary disposition away from his spouse of a specified share or proportion of his estate does not prevent an Indian from disinheriting his or her spouse by a will acknowledged before, and approved by, a specified federal official

Okl.—Parnacher v Hawkins, 222 P 2d 362, 203 Okl 387

(2) Property devised by a full-blood Creek Indian to his wife, also a full-blood Creek Indian, has been held subject to restrictions in the hands of the secretary of the interior under the 1933 statute, notwithstanding under the prior law the will operated to remove the restrictions at the time of the husband's death, when the

of his real property or real estate,<sup>82</sup> or of his personalty,<sup>83</sup> or a man whose estate is less than a specified amount cannot make a testamentary disposition of it away from his widow,<sup>84</sup> or the widow of a childless testator may take a specified portion of his estate,<sup>85</sup> or the husband shall receive a different share where the wife dies testate than where she dies wholly intestate,<sup>86</sup> or the omission of a surviving spouse from a will does not deprive him or her of his or her statutory rights in the testator's estate,<sup>87</sup> or a surviving wife may take a certain portion of her husband's estate in case he shall not provide for her in his will as set forth in the statute,<sup>88</sup> or where a person marries after making a will, and the spouse survives the testator, such surviving spouse shall receive the share in the estate of the testator which he or she would have received if the testator had died intestate, unless provision has been made for such surviving spouse by marriage contract, or in the will, or the will discloses an intention not to make such provision.<sup>89</sup>

The prohibition against disinheritance in such statutes is absolute on the testator and not dependent on his intention.<sup>90</sup> Under these statutes the surviving spouse is a forced heir of the estate to the extent of the share provided.<sup>91</sup> Such statutory right or interest cannot be devised or bequeathed away from the surviving spouse,<sup>92</sup> and in so far as a will seeks to do so it is a nullity.<sup>93</sup> However, statutory provisions limiting the amount of the estate which one spouse may will away from the other are not mandatory on the surviving spouse,<sup>94</sup> and while he

title passed to the devisee under the will

(3) Testamentary disposition by competent adult Osage Indian was governed by Oklahoma law prohibiting spouse from bequeathing away from surviving spouse so much of estate that surviving spouse would receive less in value than through succession by law, notwithstanding testatrix executed will and died in New Mexico, where she was residing and where she owned personal property, where estate disposed of by will included real estate in Osage county, interests in Osage Indian headrights, and money to testatrix' credit, as restricted Osage Indian, in treasury of United States

Bequest executed during prior marriage

Under statute providing that widow of testator who made his last will before marriage with her, and did not make provision for her by will or otherwise, shall be entitled to that share of his real estate which she would have been entitled to if he had died intestate, where testator during the lifetime of his first wife executed will in which he made bequest to person who afterwards became his second wife, such legatee did not occupy the position of a widow for whom no provision had been made in the husband's will

Where testatrix executed will leaving her entire estate to a minor child subject only to a charge in support of testatrix' mother and niece while testatrix was married to her minor child's stepfather, and thereafter testatrix and husband were divorced and then subsequently remarried, remarriage did not bring the husband after testatrix' death within the operation of the statute permitting a pre-

or she may claim the advantages of the statute and become a forced heir to the extent provided by the statute,<sup>95</sup> the survivor is not compelled to accept the statutory share provided, but may waive it.<sup>96</sup> Even in the absence of the wife's consent, it has been recognized that a husband may devise all of a specific property, if in the aggregate the property so devised does not exceed the wife's statutory fractional share of the husband's estate.<sup>97</sup>

A statute specifically providing that any married person having no children may devise a specified fractional share of his or her property to persons other than a husband or wife has been so construed as to confer on a married person who has no children the absolute right, without the consent of his or her spouse,<sup>98</sup> and regardless of an election by the surviving spouse, discussed infra §§ 1256-1267, to dispose of the specified fractional share of all his or her property,<sup>99</sup> personal as well as real,<sup>1</sup> and to apply to the operation of wills made prior to, as well as after, marriage.<sup>2</sup> Under some statutes, mere words of exclusion in a testator's will cannot take away his widow's statutory rights to a distributive share of his intestate personal property or her rights in his realty without some action on the part of the widow,<sup>3</sup> although, as appears infra §§ 1256-1267, he can put her in a position where she must elect whether to retain her statutory rights or take the benefits given her by the will. A contract to make a testamentary disposition will not prevent the promisor's surviving spouse from taking her statutory share of the deceased spouse's estate.<sup>4</sup>

band's estate does not prohibit the testator from making any direct provision by will for his widow's support or maintenance.<sup>5</sup>

(2) Validity, Sufficiency, Operation, and Effect of Consent of Spouse

A will of a married person may exclude the surviving spouse from all or a portion of the estate of the deceased to which he or she has a statutory right, where a valid consent thereto has been given by the surviving spouse.

Under a statute specifically providing that either spouse may consent in writing to the other's bequeathing from the one so consenting more than a specified share of such other's property, a will of either husband<sup>6</sup> or wife<sup>7</sup> which gives to others than the surviving spouse more than the specified share is given effect, if otherwise valid and operative, where the required consent has been given. Under such a statute, the form<sup>8</sup> or designation<sup>9</sup> of the writing is not important, provided the consent sufficiently shows that the consenting spouse agreed to accept the provision in the will in lieu of the share given by statute<sup>10</sup> and provided also that there is a sufficient witnessing of the consent.<sup>11</sup> An antenuptial contract has been held sufficient to cut off a wife's statutory right in her husband's estate and to enable him to will to others the share given her by statute.<sup>12</sup>

Under some statutes, it is not required that the written consent shall be attached to,<sup>13</sup> or be regarded as a part of,<sup>14</sup> the will, or that the consent shall designate the will to which it applies,<sup>15</sup> or specify the particular property which may be bequeathed or devised.<sup>16</sup> Also, under some statutes, consideration for the consent is not required,<sup>17</sup> and it is not necessary that the execution of the consent should precede the execution of the will<sup>18</sup> The consent may be given at any time during the life of the testator,<sup>19</sup> but the consent provided for by some statutes cannot be executed after the will is probated<sup>20</sup> In some jurisdictions the written consent by the husband to a devise by the wife of her real property is valid and effective, although given in furtherance of a void agreement between them by which each released all interest in the other's property, where the wife had performed her part of the agreement<sup>21</sup> Where the statute provides merely that the consent shall be executed in the presence of witnesses, it is not necessary that such witnesses shall be subscribing witnesses<sup>22</sup> The signature of the husband to his petition for appointment as executor of his wife's will is not such a formal, express consent in writing as is required by some statutes<sup>23</sup>

Under some statutes, a married person may dispose of all his or her property by will where the required consent has duly been executed by such person's wife<sup>24</sup> or husband,<sup>25</sup> and it is not necessary that the will shall make any provision for the consenting spouse<sup>26</sup> Except as the rule is limited by rules hereinafter stated, under some statutes a consent which has duly been executed is irrevocable,<sup>27</sup> at least it may not arbitrarily be revoked or recalled.<sup>28</sup>

While in some jurisdictions, in order to render effective a consent otherwise in accordance with the requirements of the applicable statute, it is necessary that only the consenting spouse act freely and understandingly,<sup>29</sup> and the mere fact that the estate

disposed of by will is larger than the consenting spouse anticipated does not render the consent ineffective,<sup>30</sup> the view has been taken that there is cast on a husband who takes from his wife a consent to the making of his will the affirmative duty to make to her a fair disclosure of his property and her rights so that her consent will be an actual one based on an intelligent knowledge as to his property and the effect of her consent,<sup>31</sup> and that in the absence of such disclosure the surviving wife may, under certain circumstances, rescind or avoid her consent and take under the statute<sup>32</sup>

- Operation of law of descent and distribution as defeated only by a legally executed will disposing of

in the law of descent and distribution,<sup>40</sup> as, for example, children,<sup>41</sup> of the testator have no absolute right to a share in his estate and may be excluded by his will to the extent that he desires.<sup>42</sup> The testator may also disinherit completely the children of a son by the son's wife, or leave them as much or as little of his estate as he desires, and such partial or complete disinheritance may be based on disapproval or even hatred of the son's wife, or any other motive.<sup>43</sup> Where a testator makes a testamentary gift to those who would take under the intestate laws of the state, excluding specified individuals, the exclusion is valid.<sup>44</sup> A minor is entitled to take a share of land under a will where such share was acquired by the testator by reason of the intestacy of the testator's father, notwithstanding that the minor is not an heir of the intestate.<sup>45</sup> Property devised by an Indian to his children has been held subject to restrictions in the hands of the secretary of the interior.<sup>46</sup>

The view has been taken that certain statutory provisions giving heirs or next of kin of a deceased spouse a share of the part of the estate of the surviving spouse, on the latter's death, as was community property and all of such part of the estate as was the separate estate of the spouse who died first, are applicable only in cases of intestacy and do not prevent the surviving spouse from making testamentary disposition of the property covered by the statute.<sup>47</sup> A will of a husband expressly excluding his children by a former wife from participating in his estate has been held ineffective to bar a statutory interest of the children in community property on the subsequent death of the widow.<sup>48</sup>

Adopted child. An adoptive parent may by will leave his property to others and disinherit his adopted child.<sup>49</sup> In the absence of statute prohibiting it, a natural parent may bequeath property by will to a child whom he has permitted to be adopted by another.<sup>50</sup>

b. Statutory Provision for Forced Heirship

In civil law jurisdictions in which the doctrine of forced heirship operates, as discussed in Descent and Distribution § 26, statutes restrict the power of testamentary disposition to a certain proportion of the testator's estate, varying in amount according to the number of heirs and their nearness of kinship to him,<sup>53</sup> and forbid the deprivation of the forced heirs of the portion of the estate reserved to them by law.<sup>54</sup> The law establishes the right of a forced heir to claim the legal portion coming to him out of the estate of the testator, which right needs only to be asserted to be allowed.<sup>55</sup> In general, therefore, the rights of forced heirs, in the absence of their consent,<sup>56</sup> cannot be avoided by will,<sup>57</sup> where an intent to disinherit is not accomplished.<sup>58</sup> Under these statutes, the testator may dispose of the disposable portion of his estate as he sees fit.<sup>59</sup> The disposable portion of the estate is

Forced heir defined

(1) "A forced heir is one in whose favor the law has reserved a specific interest in the estate of a decedent" U.S.—Salatch v Hellen, D.C. Cal., 4 F.Supp. 474, 475

(2) "One who perforce of law succeeds to the whole estate of the deceased, with such exceptions only as are especially provided for and regulated by law, whose rights do not depend on the pleasure or will of the testator, but upon the law, independent of and adverse to that will"

Tex.—Hagerty v Hagerty, 12 Tex 456, 457

(3) "What are termed 'forced heirs' are nothing more than certain legal heirs, who by reason of their relationship to the deceased have had reserved to them the right to claim as heirs, if they so elect, a certain proportion of the property of the deceased, and which he may have disposed of to their prejudice"

La.—Miller v Miller, 29 So 802, 804, 105 La 257

(4) Under Spanish law "the share of an estate to which an heir was entitled was called his legitimate portion, and he was denominated a forced heir, having by force of law

a paramount right to his share of the succession"

Tex.—Crain v Crain, 17 Tex 81, 90

(5) Forced heirs are the legitimate children of the disposer left at his decease

La.—Bauman v Pennywell, 107 So 425, 427, 160 La 555

Freely disposable share

The phrase "freely disposable share", appearing in an Italian will, has reference to distinction made by Italian law between portion of an estate which must be transmitted to "forced heirs" and the portion over which a testator has freedom of disposition

N.Y.—In re O'Connor, 82 N.Y.S.2d 310

Collation of advances

A will designating testator's second wife as universal legatee did not encroach on the legitimate of the testator's children by a prior marriage, where, after fictitious return to estate of donations made by testator and deduction of debts to succession, the disposable portion of the estate was more than the disposition to the second wife, notwithstanding entire estate at testator's death may have been community estate

To widow

Where a statute gives only the right of usufruct in the portion of the community belonging to the deceased when he has left no will, he can give, by his testament, the usufruct of that portion, which would belong to the surviving widow, without any will, or he can declare that in the event of a particular contingency, his widow shall inherit the portion of his property, which the law authorizes him to bequeath.

determined by the disposing capacity of the testator at the time of his death,<sup>60</sup> which, in turn, is determined by the existence or nonexistence of forced heirs.<sup>61</sup> Thus a testator who leaves no forced heirs is not, in general, required to provide for any particular persons,<sup>62</sup> and is capable of disposing of his entire estate.<sup>63</sup>

Discrimination among forced heirs In Louisiana the law favors the equality of forced heirs,<sup>64</sup> and a testator may not so dispose of his estate in favor of one or more heirs as to infringe on the legitimate portion of other heirs.<sup>65</sup> The legitimate, however, is the only portion of an estate that a forced heir can claim as a legal right.<sup>66</sup> The right of a testator or testatrix to discriminate among his or her descendants in making gifts of the disposable portion of the estate has been recognized or upheld,<sup>67</sup> and it is not necessary that there should be a manifestation or express declaration of an intention to give an advantage or extra portion to the favored heirs other than that disclosed by the disposing provisions of the will.<sup>68</sup> The rule permitting such discrimination as to the disposable portion has been applied

even where the testator also attempted to dispose of the nondisposable portion contrary to the applicable statute.<sup>69</sup> All that the testator has to do in the distribution of his estate among his heirs as he sees fit, to be sure that his will shall be carried out, is to avoid impinging on the legitimate which the law reserves to each of his forced heirs.<sup>70</sup> It has been held that the only right of a forced heir who has by will been deprived of all share in the estate is to claim from the other heirs his legitimate.<sup>71</sup>

In determining the rights of the heirs among themselves they may, under certain circumstances, be required to account for, or collate, advances, received from the testator,<sup>72</sup> and where it appears that a forced heir has received property by donation during the testator's lifetime more in amount than his legitimate he is not entitled to receive anything from the testator's succession.<sup>73</sup> The obligation of a forced heir seeking his legitimate to collate does not apply to donations mortis causa.<sup>74</sup> The right of heirs who are also legatees to charge the estate of the testator with the cost of acquiring an outstanding claim to an interest in property disposed

Proof of donation

(1) The law does not favor actions by forced heirs to undo transactions of their ancestors as done in fraud of their rights, and such actions can only succeed where proof adduced in support thereof is convincing, if not irresistible

La.—Roach v Roach, supra

(2) In action by forced heir to reduce legacies, wherein defendants alleged inter vivos donations to plaintiff in excess of his legitimate, testimony of defendants and forced heir that at time land was deeded to him forced heir did not have the money stated in the deed as consideration was insufficient to prove that the transfer was not a bona fide sale of the property of by the will has been denied where the transaction was an individual one on the part of such heirs<sup>75</sup>

Charges and conditions Under statutes so providing, charges and conditions cannot be imposed by the testator on the legitimate portion of the forced heirs<sup>76</sup> Under such statutes, where a testator bequeaths to the forced heir nothing beyond his legitime, the only testamentary function he can exercise with reference thereto is that of designating the distinct part of his estate which shall be assigned to the heir in settlement of his legitime,<sup>77</sup> which part so assigned must be accepted by the heir,<sup>78</sup> reserving his right, in case of its deficiency in value to satisfy his claim, to have the deficiency made up out of the estate<sup>79</sup> Where, however, the will bequeaths to the forced heir more than his legitimate portion, the testator may attach to the bequest any lawful conditions,<sup>80</sup> and in such case the forced heir must exercise the option of either accepting the bequest as a whole, with the conditions attached, or of renouncing all testamentary advantage, and claiming his legitime only as secured to him by the law independent of the testament<sup>81</sup>

tion of his estate is not null, or wholly void,<sup>82</sup> and the court will not set aside the will<sup>83</sup> Where a testator disposes of more of his estate than is permitted by law, the proper and ordinary remedy is for the court to make a reduction<sup>84</sup> The remedy of the forced heir is not against the executor of the estate, but it is against the legatees whose legacies he deems excessive to reduce such legacies<sup>85</sup> The right to demand a reduction includes a demand on any donee or legatee<sup>86</sup> whether he is an heir or a stranger<sup>87</sup> This demand may be made, however, only when the donation or legacy exceeds the disposable portion<sup>88</sup> and only such excess may be included in the demand<sup>89</sup> Also, the legitime which each one of several forced heirs may demand, in case of an excessive legacy, is not the whole of the reserved portion, but is only each heir's proportionate share of the reserved portion<sup>90</sup>

Under a statute so providing, property which is the subject of a particular legacy which is entitled to preference will not be reduced to provide for the forced heir unless the value of the residue falls short of the legal reservation<sup>91</sup> Also, under some statutes, forced heirs are given the option, in the case of a donation of a usufruct or of an annuity which exceeds the disposable portion, either to execute the disposition or abandon to the donee the

Legacy in addition to legitime

Where will gave testatrix' husband use of all her property during his life, and at his death gave the property to two daughters and a grandson, and bequeathed son one hundred dollars per month for life, it was not intention of testatrix to give son the legacy of one hundred dollars a month in addition to his legitime ownership of the disposable portion<sup>92</sup> A forced heir is not required to claim his legitime, he may waive his right to do so<sup>93</sup> Thus, a forced heir may by his consent to, or ratification of, an excessive donation lose or abandon his right to claim a reduction,<sup>94</sup> and if he fails to claim his legitime within the prescriptive period the ownership conveyed by the will is maintained<sup>95</sup>

Remunerative donations. Under the Louisiana civil code a remunerative donation may be made by will notwithstanding there are forced heirs<sup>96</sup> The remunerative donation is designed to recompense for services rendered<sup>97</sup> It is not a real donation, but a dation en paiement, the giving by the testator of his estate to the legatee in payment of his services<sup>98</sup> If a remunerative donation given by will exceeds the disposable portion, the legatee is bound to prove the value of his services<sup>99</sup> No reduction will be made in a remunerative donation if the value of the services is equal to, or greater than, the amount of the legacy,<sup>1</sup> or if the value of the services should be little inferior to that of the gift, not even though the donation infringes on the legitime of the forced heirs<sup>2</sup> If, however, it is not shown that the value of the legatee's services is equal to the amount of the legacy, the legacy will be reduced,<sup>3</sup> but it cannot be reduced below the estimated value of the services rendered<sup>4</sup> If the remunerative donation does not exceed the disposable portion, the declaration of the testator as to the services rendered and their value is conclusive on the heirs<sup>5</sup> and no proof is required of the legatee<sup>6</sup> One who avers that the remunerative donation exceeds the disposable portion has the burden of showing that such is the case<sup>7</sup>

Computation of disposable portion and legitime The method of determining the disposable portion of the estate is sometimes fixed by statute<sup>8</sup> A forced heir and beneficiary under a will, whose share under the will is in excess of his legitime, may not assert that a provision of the will against the collation of donations inter vivos should be disregarded in the computation of his legitime and at the same time demand that he receive the benefit of a provision in the will against the collation of donations inter vivos<sup>9</sup>

What law governs In determining whether a statute fixing the disposable portion of the estate in the event that the testator leaves descendants is applicable, the view has been taken that the law of the testator's domicile governs<sup>10</sup> and that such a statute of the testator's domicile is applicable,<sup>11</sup> except where the testator expressly declares in his will that his testamentary dispositions are to be construed and regulated by the laws of another state<sup>12</sup> The rights of forced heirs, however, whether resident or nonresident, to that portion of the testator's estate composed of real estate or immovables are determined by the law of the situs of the proper-

c. Capacity in Which Heirs or Next of Kin Take Property Devised or Bequeathed to Them

As a general rule, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, heirs, next of kin, or children who receive by will the same estate or interest as they would take by descent in case of the intestacy of the testator take by descent, and not by purchase or under the will, but where the devise or bequest is different in quality, quantity, or tenure than the beneficiary would take in case of intestacy, he takes by purchase or under the will

In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, where a testator attempts to make a devise of land to his heir at law and the estate devised is the same as that which the heir would take by descent in case of intestacy, the designated devisee takes by descent and not by purchase<sup>16</sup> In other words, the designated devisee takes by descent and not under the will<sup>17</sup> or by descent and not by devise,<sup>18</sup> and the devise is void<sup>19</sup> and ineffectual<sup>20</sup> Similarly, the view has been taken that, if without a bequest of personal property the designated beneficiary would have taken exactly the same interest as the will purports to give him, he takes under statute<sup>21</sup> and not by purchase or under the will,<sup>22</sup> and that the bequest is void,<sup>23</sup> but there is authority for the view that a bequest to the father of the testator who is under statute next of kin of the testator may be given effect<sup>24</sup>

Where the devise or bequest is of a different estate or interest,<sup>25</sup> that is to say, different in quality<sup>26</sup> or quantity<sup>27</sup> from that which the devisee or legatee would take in case of intestacy, or according to some cases, where the will effects a conversion of the realty involved into personalty,<sup>28</sup> the devise or gift is valid and the beneficiary takes by purchase The true criterion by which to determine the question here considered is, whether, if there had been no will, or the devise was eliminated from the will, the proposed devisee would have taken precisely the same benefit by descent as is given by the devise,<sup>29</sup> if he would have so taken he is in by descent,<sup>30</sup> otherwise he takes as devisee<sup>31</sup> In this connection the view has been expressed that a contingent remainder or an executory devise is not the equivalent of a vested right either in quantity or quality<sup>32</sup> So a vested remainder in a larger or smaller share of the property than would have come by descent is not the equivalent of a reversion<sup>33</sup>

The rule that a devise which purports to give to the heirs the same estate as would pass under the statute of descent is void does not apply to the devise of a remainder, which merely describes the devisees as those persons who would be his heirs if the life tenant who was the testator's only heir should predecease him<sup>35</sup>

§ 99 Illegitimates and Their Descendants

In the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions to the contrary, a testator may dispose of his property by will to the exclusion of his illegitimate child, or in favor of his, or other, illegitimate children, but statutes which restrict the amount which may be given to illegitimate children will be given effect

property by will to the exclusion of his illegitimate child<sup>37</sup> On the other hand, except in so far as the right may be regulated or restricted by statutory or constitutional provision, a testator may dispose of property to persons who are illegitimate<sup>38</sup> and to a person whose relationship to the testator is established through an ancestor of such person who is an illegitimate<sup>39</sup> Thus, in the absence of constitutional or statutory restrictions, a testator may by will give property to his own illegitimate children,<sup>40</sup> even to the exclusion of his legitimate children<sup>41</sup>

The rule permitting testamentary gifts to illegitimates has been recognized or applied even in respect of illegitimates begotten but not born before the execution of the will<sup>42</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that in order that a child may take under express terms of a will as a natural child, it must have acquired the reputation of being the natural child of a certain person at the time of the making of the will,<sup>43</sup> and hence that a testamentary provision for illegitimates unborn and not in ventre sa mère is illegal and void<sup>44</sup>

Some statutes have been enacted, the purpose and effect of which are to restrict the amount which may be given to illegitimate children by will,<sup>45</sup> or which,

Insurance

The statutes prohibiting testamen-

What law governs. In respect of real property, statutes limiting the amount of his property which a man may by will give to his illegitimate child or children where he leaves a surviving wife or legitimate children apply to,<sup>54</sup> and only to,<sup>55</sup> real property in the jurisdiction in which the statute has been enacted and has operative force.

§ 100. Paramours, Concubines, or Parties to Invalid Marriage

In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, paramours, concubines, and parties to invalid marriages are not precluded from taking a legacy or devise under the will of the person with whom they engaged in illegal cohabitation, but under some statutes the amount and kind of property which they may receive under the will of a person with whom they have unlawfully cohabited are limited.

In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, a devise or bequest is not invalid solely because the beneficiary lived with the maker of the will in illegal cohabitation<sup>56</sup> So the law does not prohibit a man from making a will in favor of his paramour<sup>57</sup> and ignoring his wife<sup>58</sup> if he does so with free, sound, and disposing mind, pursuant to the formalities which the law prescribes, and past illicit cohabitation alone does not render void

Presumption

Disposition by nuncupative will in favor of children of testator's adulterous bastard son, even if son were living, would merely create a rebuttable presumption that children were interposed for son, who, by reason of his status, was incapable of taking a testator's gift to his partner in such cohabitation<sup>59</sup> Likewise, the existence of illicit relations with a man does not prevent a woman from making a will in his favor<sup>60</sup>

The fact that a testator was not legally divorced from his wife does not necessarily render invalid testamentary provision by him for another woman whom he had lived with, and treated, as his wife,<sup>61</sup> and a like rule applies to testamentary provision for a woman who had lived with testator as his wife without having obtained a valid divorce from her husband<sup>62</sup> Thus, the testator's knowledge that he was not legally married to the woman with whom he was living does not of itself prevent his making a valid testamentary gift to her,<sup>63</sup> and the fact that the beneficiary under a will is guilty of bigamy in marrying the testatrix does not disqualify him, where the testatrix before executing the will learned that he had another wife living,<sup>64</sup> or had knowledge of all the facts surrounding the prior marriage even though she was mistaken as to the legal effect of such facts<sup>65</sup>

In some jurisdictions, however, statutes grounded on public policy impose restrictions on the amount and kind of property which a testator or testatrix may give to persons with whom they have unlawfully cohabited,<sup>66</sup> or which a married man having a lawful wife or living children of his own may devise or bequeath to a woman with whom he lived in adultery<sup>67</sup> Under such statutes a gift or devise in excess of the amount or proportion authorized is void only as to the excess,<sup>68</sup> and as to the excess, it has been held not absolutely void, but only voidable at the election of those authorized by statute to contest the testamentary disposition<sup>69</sup> Where, however, the persons authorized to do so contest a tes-

§ 101. Professional, Religious, or Other Confidential Adviser; Draftsman of Will

In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, an attorney or other confidential adviser of the testator may take as legatee or devisee

In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, an attorney for,<sup>72</sup> or confidential adviser of,<sup>73</sup> the testator may take as legatee or devisee even though such legatee or devisee drew the will<sup>74</sup> However, an attorney for the testator who used his position to gain benefit for himself may not receive a bequest or devise<sup>75</sup>

Under some statutes doctors, surgeons, and ministers of religious worship who have professionally attended the testator in his last illness are incapacitated to take under his will except as provided by the statute<sup>76</sup> Such a statute, it has been held, does not invalidate a legacy to a minister of worship where the testatrix did not die for more than a year after the will containing the legacy was made<sup>77</sup> Also, it has no application where a minister was called after the will was made, and after the testator had declined spiritual assistance,<sup>78</sup> or to a physician or minister who is the husband of the testatrix, in the absence of a showing that he married the tes-

tatrix in fraud of the law or with the fraudulent design of defeating the incapacity established by law<sup>79</sup> Such statutes apply to the devolution of real property situated in the state,<sup>80</sup> notwithstanding the will was executed in another state where both the testatrix and the beneficiary were resident and where such a disposition was permitted<sup>81</sup>

As a general rule a testamentary gift to an attesting or subscribing witness to the will is void, unless there are sufficient other witnesses to the will to establish it.

other witnesses to the will,<sup>85</sup> or unless the will cannot otherwise be proved than by the testimony of such witness,<sup>86</sup> as, for example, where there are not enough witnesses other than the witness who is a beneficiary<sup>87</sup>

Under exceptions contained in some statutes in respect of gifts to an heir at law of the testator, a gift to such an heir who was an attesting or subscribing witness has been upheld<sup>88</sup> Other statutes save to an attesting or subscribing witness, when it is necessary for him to testify in order to establish the will, so much of the share of the testator's estate as would have descended or been distributed to such witness, in case the will were not established, as will not exceed the value of the devise or bequest made to him in the will<sup>89</sup> A statute avoiding a testamentary gift to a witness to a will<sup>90</sup> or to a subscribing witness<sup>91</sup> applies only to an attesting or subscribing witness, and does not apply to a person, other than such a witness, who testifies when the will is probated<sup>92</sup> There is authority for the view that, notwithstanding a statutory provision avoiding a testamentary gift to an attesting witness, a beneficiary under a will who signs his name to the will at the place for signatures of subscribing witnesses does not thereby avoid his beneficial interest if he signs merely as a witness to the signature of a subscribing witness who is a marksman<sup>93</sup>

Beneficial interest Under some statutes the devise, legacy, or interest must be a matter of personal benefit to the recipient, that is, it must be a beneficial or pecuniary one, in order for it to be invalidated by the recipient acting as an attesting or subscribing witness to the will<sup>94</sup>

To parent of witness A statute invalidating testamentary gifts to attesting or subscribing witnesses to the will has been held not to invalidate a gift to the parent of a subscribing witness, even though, because of the parent's death prior to that of the testator, the witness becomes entitled to the parent's share under a statute preventing the lapse of legacies<sup>95</sup>

Incidental benefit to attesting or subscribing witness The view has been expressed that a statute avoiding beneficial devises, legacies, and gifts to a subscribing witness does not avoid a devise to a person other than a subscribing witness, even though the subscribing witness might incidentally receive some benefit from the devise.<sup>96</sup> Thus, the validity of testamentary gifts to various entities or organizations has been recognized or upheld in the face of the alleged incompetency of an attesting or subscribing witness because of some allegedly incidental interest as a member of, or stockholder in, such entity or organization,<sup>97</sup> as, for example, a gift to a fraternal<sup>98</sup> or charitable<sup>99</sup> corporation where a member or members of such corporation were attesting or subscribing witnesses, or a gift to a town in trust for the poor where the subscribing witnesses were taxpayers of the town<sup>1</sup>

Gift to attesting or subscribing witness as trustee In general the statutes here considered do not invalidate a testamentary gift to an attesting or subscribing witness as trustee,<sup>2</sup> at least where the statute avoids "beneficial" gifts to such a witness,<sup>3</sup> and the mere fact that he would be entitled to the commissions allowed by statute will not make the gift a beneficial gift to the trustee so as to invalidate it<sup>4</sup> Regardless of whether or not the gift is held void under the statute in so far as the trustee's interest is concerned, the interest of the beneficiaries under the trust who are not subscribing witnesses may stand<sup>5</sup>

Gifts for services as executor A gift by will to an executor as compensation for his services as such over and above his commissions is not invalidated because he was a subscribing witness under a statute voiding "beneficial" testamentary gifts to subscribing witnesses<sup>6</sup>

Appointment of executor or trustee. The view has been taken that a statutory provision avoiding a testamentary gift to an attesting or subscribing witness does not invalidate the appointment of an executor<sup>7</sup> who was an attesting or subscribing witness, merely because he would be entitled to the commissions allowed by statute<sup>8</sup> A statute rendering void any beneficial interest which may be given to a subscribing witness, unless the will be otherwise attested by a sufficient number of witnesses other than such subscribing witnesses, has, however, been construed to include the interest of an executor so as to prevent his acting as executor if his testimony is required,<sup>9</sup> and a like rule has been recognized or applied in respect of the appointment of a corporate executor<sup>10</sup> or trustee<sup>11</sup> where a stockholder of the corporation is a subscribing witness.

What law governs The question as to whether a witness to a will is qualified to take a share of a trust estate given him is governed by the law of the state of the situs of the trust property<sup>12</sup> The validity of a devise or bequest to an attesting or subscribing witness to the will will be determined

under the statutes as they existed when the will was executed <sup>13</sup>

b. Holographic or Nuncupative Will

Statutes invalidating testamentary gifts to attesting and subscribing witnesses to wills have been held to apply to nuncupative wills, but not to holographic wills

In jurisdictions in which attestation of a holographic will is not required, as considered infra § 205, the view has been taken that statutes avoiding testamentary gifts to attesting witnesses do not apply to such wills <sup>14</sup> Hence, a gift to a legatee or devisee by a holographic will is not invalidated by his signing the document as a witness, <sup>15</sup> and devisees and legatees may be competent witnesses to prove such a will without losing their devises and legacies, <sup>16</sup> even though they actually attested the will <sup>17</sup> On the other hand, a statute voiding a legacy or devise to a subscribing witness has been held to apply to both oral and written wills, and hence to invalidate a testamentary gift by nuncupative will to one whose testimony is essential to prove the will <sup>18</sup>

c. Will Proved or Provable Independently of Witness Benefited

As a general rule, statutes invalidating testamentary gifts to attesting and subscribing witnesses to wills do not invalidate such a gift where there are a sufficient number of other disinterested and competent witnesses to validate and establish the will.

Under a statute providing that no subscribing witness to a will can derive any benefit therefrom unless there are a specified number of disinterested and competent witnesses to the will, a testamentary gift to a subscribing witness may be given effect if there are other witnesses of the required number who are disinterested and competent <sup>19</sup> Also, under statutes invalidating a testamentary gift to an attesting or subscribing witness if the will cannot otherwise be proved than by the testimony of such witness, it has been held that where the will can be proved independently of the testimony of such witness, the fact that he was a witness to the will does not affect the validity of the gift to him, <sup>20</sup> at least where the witnesses, sufficient as to number and competency, other than the beneficiary are not themselves beneficiaries, <sup>21</sup> and it has been held or recognized that this rule applies even where the witness who is a beneficiary actually testifies when the will is offered for probate <sup>22</sup> There is authority, however, for the view that a gift to an attesting witness is void, under a statute of the latter type, where he was needed to make up the number of attesting witnesses required by law even though his testimony was not needed to prove the will <sup>23</sup> Also,

In New York

(1) Prior to the amendment in 1942 of § 27 of the New York State Decedent Estate Law, so as to provide that no subscribing witness to a will shall be entitled to receive any beneficial devise, legacy, interest or appointment of any real or personal estate thereunder unless there are two other subscribing witnesses to the will who are not beneficiaries thereunder, it was held that a testamentary gift to a witness to the will was not invalid, even though the will had no more than the required number of witnesses, where he did not testify on the probate proceedings and the will was admitted solely on the testimony of the other witnesses to the will

Empire Trust Co. v Sample, 50 N.Y.S.2d 5

(2) Such a gift was held valid where the will was proved without the testimony of the witness, even though the will had no more than the required number of witnesses and the witness intentionally did not testify on its probate in order to preserve his right to the gift

N.Y.—In re Walters' Estate, supra

(3) However, where the three subscribing witnesses to a will were all legatees and two of such witnesses

it has been held, under a statute which, without qualification, renders null and void a gift to an attesting witness, that such a witness cannot take under the will even though the number of witnesses is in excess of that required by statute and the witness who is benefited need not testify in order to prove the will.<sup>24</sup>

d. Codicils

Statutory provisions which expressly invalidate a testamentary gift to an attesting or subscribing witness to a codicil, or which, without mentioning codicils, invalidate such a gift to an attesting or subscribing witness to a will, invalidate a gift in a codicil to a witness thereto, but the gift is invalidated only where the witness has attested the instrument under which he takes

Statutory provisions expressly invalidating a beneficial devise, legacy, or the like to an attesting or subscribing witness to a codicil invalidate such a gift in a codicil to a witness thereto.<sup>25</sup> Also, statutes invalidating a testamentary gift to an attesting or subscribing witness to a will, although not expressly mentioning codicils, have been held applicable thereto,<sup>26</sup> and, under such a statute, a legacy or devise in a codicil to an attesting or subscribing witness to the codicil may be held void for that reason.<sup>27</sup> Likewise, under a statutory provision that if any person shall be a subscribing witness in the execution of any will in which any interest is passed to him and such will cannot be proved without his testimony or without proof of his signature as witness such will shall be void only

as to him and persons claiming under him, a testamentary gift to one of the two subscribing witnesses to a codicil, contained in such codicil, is void,<sup>28</sup> but the provisions for other beneficiaries may be given effect if otherwise valid.<sup>29</sup>

Under these statutes a testamentary gift is invalidated only where the witness has attested the instrument under which he takes.<sup>30</sup> They do not render void a testamentary gift contained in a will because the beneficiary who was not a witness to the will was a subscribing witness to a codicil which made no provision for him,<sup>31</sup> especially where the will alone is proved,<sup>32</sup> or, it has been held, because a beneficiary who was not a witness to the will was a subscribing witness to a codicil which contained a legacy for him, the legacy in the codicil only being declared void in such case.<sup>33</sup> Furthermore, such statutes do not render void a legacy in a codicil to one who is not an attesting witness to the codicil, but who is an attesting witness to, but not a beneficiary of, the will, and whose testimony is necessary to prove the will.<sup>34</sup>

§ 103. Spouse of Attesting Witness

Under various statutes a testamentary gift to the husband or wife of an attesting or subscribing witness to the will is void

Under statutes expressly so providing a testamentary gift to the husband or wife of an attesting witness is void, except to the extent that the husband or wife would have taken had the testator died were unavailable at time of probate and third witness identified testator's signature and handwriting in will and testified positively that testator was capable of making a will and third witness identified signatures of the other witnesses, will was not "proved without the testimony of such witness," so that legacies to the third witness were void, notwithstanding such witness gave testimony against the due execution of will

intestate,<sup>35</sup> at least in the absence of a sufficient number of other competent witnesses to the will<sup>36</sup> A statute of this latter type does not invalidate a gift to the husband or wife of an attesting witness where the will may duly be proved without the testimony of such witness<sup>37</sup>

Where the statute contains no provision as to the validity of a gift to the husband or wife of a witness to the will, the courts have not been in complete agreement on the question as to whether a statute avoiding a testamentary gift to an attesting or subscribing witness is to have the effect of rendering void a gift to the husband or wife of such witness In some early cases the view has been taken that certain statutes of this type avoid gifts of this character,<sup>38</sup> as, for example, a gift to the wife of a witness to the will<sup>39</sup> and a gift to the husband of a witness to the will,<sup>40</sup> on the theory that husband and wife are in legal intendment one person, and that a gift to one is a gift to both<sup>41</sup> In a number of jurisdictions, however, it is held that a gift to the husband or wife of an attesting witness is not avoided by a statute avoiding a gift to an attesting witness,<sup>42</sup> as, for example, where the husband is a witness and his wife is a beneficiary,<sup>43</sup> or where the wife is a witness and the husband is a beneficiary<sup>44</sup> A denial that this type of statute renders void a gift to the husband or wife of a witness to the will has left such witness an incompetent witness to the will in some jurisdictions under the common-law, or statutory, rule which renders incompetent as a witness to a will the husband or wife of a person who is a beneficiary under the will, as discussed infra § 185, and, therefore, in some cases has resulted in rendering the whole will void for lack of due attestation where the subscribing witness is the husband<sup>45</sup> or wife<sup>46</sup> of a beneficiary under the will Conversely, a construction that the statute avoids a gift to the husband or wife of a witness to the will may render the will operative in other respects where the subscribing witness is the husband<sup>47</sup> or wife<sup>48</sup> of a beneficiary

ter, a beneficiary under a will who murders the testator in order to make the will operative cannot take under the will under the principle that no one can take advantage of his own wrong,<sup>50</sup> and it seems that it is not a necessary condition to the application of the disqualification rule that there should be conviction.<sup>51</sup> A limitation on this view has apparently been made in laying down the rule that the killing of the testator by the devisee for the purpose of obtaining the benefits given by the will does not render the will void but merely authorizes a court of equity to deprive the devisee of the fruits of his iniquity.<sup>52</sup> According to some authorities, any person found guilty of a murder cannot inherit, by will, from the person killed, but should be considered as though he had preceded in death the person whom he killed.<sup>53</sup>

On the other hand, it has been held that in the absence of a statute, one who has feloniously killed his ancestor or testator is not precluded from receiving inheritance or benefits under the will,<sup>54</sup> and that a statute preventing a murderer from participating in the estate of the person killed does not preclude a felonious killer of his benefactor from succeeding to his property, by will, unless he has been convicted of either first or second degree murder.<sup>55</sup> Moreover, a beneficiary committing a crime causing the testator's death may take under the will, if the testator lives a reasonable time thereafter and during such time retains his competency to make a new will or to revoke or modify one already made, but fails to do so.<sup>56</sup> Where a will devises a life estate to one person with a remainder to another, the fact that the remainderman kills the life tenant has been held not to prevent a fee-simple estate from vesting in the remainderman.<sup>57</sup>

A statutory provision that no person who feloniously takes the life of another shall take by devise or legacy from him any portion of his estate is a public statute governing a particular subject,<sup>58</sup> and the courts may not by judicial interpretation enlarge the legislative intent.<sup>59</sup> Such statute is in effect a penal statute and must be strictly construed.<sup>60</sup> The provision of the civil code, relating to forfeiture of heirs' share in property embezzled or concealed, does not apply to a legatee who is the executrix of the estate.<sup>61</sup> Assuming that, under the civil code, defamation of the testator's memory by a legatee may be such grievous injury as warrants revocation of a bequest at the suit of other legatees or heirs, an attack on the will for unsoundness of mind of the testator is not such grievous injury to the testator's memory as is required.<sup>62</sup>

§ 105 Unincorporated Associations

In a number of jurisdictions an unincorporated society or association, in the absence of statutory permission, does not have the capacity to receive a direct devise or bequest, although a devise or bequest may be made to trustees for the benefit of such a society or association.

According to some cases a devise of land cannot be made to an unincorporated society or association by name,<sup>63</sup> unless there is a statute authorizing it,<sup>64</sup> although such devise may be made to trustees for the benefit of such a society or association.<sup>65</sup> An unincorporated association capable of identification has been held to be capable to take an unconditional bequest of personalty not charged with a permanent trust or use,<sup>66</sup> and statutes in some jurisdictions have permitted unincorporated societies to take bequests.<sup>67</sup> In some jurisdictions, however, in the absence of statutory authorization, an unincorporated association does not have the legal capacity to receive a direct bequest.<sup>68</sup> Even in the jurisdictions which recognize the right of an unincorporated society to take a bequest, the view has been taken that such right does not extend to bequests made on permanent uses.<sup>69</sup> Bequests to trustees for use for the purposes of an unincorporated association have been upheld.<sup>70</sup> While, according to some cases, the question as to whether an unincorporated association may take a bequest is governed by the law of its domicile,<sup>71</sup> there apparently is authority for the view that usually the question is governed by the law of the testator's domicile.<sup>72</sup>

Subsequent incorporation. Although there is authority apparently to the contrary,<sup>73</sup> the view has been taken that, where at the time of the death of the testator an association is not incorporated and, therefore, does not have the legal capacity to take a present vested interest in a testamentary gift, subsequent incorporation does not give it capacity to receive such gift.<sup>74</sup> While, however, before the time for vesting of the devise or legacy, after the death of the testator, the association is incorporated, it may take under the will if otherwise authorized.<sup>75</sup>

a. In General

In the absence of statutory restrictions, a testator may give his property to a corporation capable of taking

In the absence of constitutional or statutory restrictions, a testator may by will give his property to a corporation capable of taking,<sup>76</sup> and the authority of a corporation to acquire property by will<sup>77</sup> as, for example, by bequest<sup>78</sup> or by devise,<sup>79</sup> has been recognized. There is authority for the view that express authorization to take by devise is not required in the absence of a statute requiring such authorization,<sup>80</sup> and that a corporation may take by devise if it has general power to acquire,<sup>81</sup> or to hold, purchase, and convey,<sup>82</sup> real property. The view has been expressed that, in general, where the statute authorizes "persons" to take under a will, the word "persons" includes corporations in the absence of any provision limiting its meaning.<sup>83</sup>

Some statutes have placed restrictions on the power of corporations to acquire property by will,<sup>84</sup> as,

for example, statutes prohibiting their taking real property by devise<sup>85</sup> unless expressly authorized by their charter or by statute<sup>86</sup> Where a devise to a corporation is prohibited, it has been held that such a devise is not void, but voidable only<sup>87</sup> Where there is a constitutional provision invalidating the "gift," "sale," or "devise" of real or personal property for certain purposes without the prior or subsequent authorization of the legislature, legislative authorization to a corporation to take and hold subscriptions or contributions in money or otherwise for such purposes does not authorize such corporation to take under a bequest<sup>88</sup>

Where the estate or interest which a corporation is to take is created at the time of the death of the testator, in general, capacity of the corporation to take by devise must exist at that time,<sup>89</sup> but the validity of a testamentary gift to a corporation not authorized to take has been recognized where the terms of the will show that the testator contemplated that authority to take should subsequently be acquired by statute<sup>90</sup> The view has been taken that there is no objection to a corporation's taking property on a trust not strictly within the expressed purposes of its institution but collateral to them<sup>91</sup> Where a corporation is wholly incapacitated to take by devise and the real property involved is not otherwise disposed of by the will, it descends to the heirs at law of the testator<sup>92</sup>

Corporation to be created While there is authority for the view that a devise of a remainder of real property to a corporation to be created after the death of the testator is void because there is no devisee competent to take at the time and the possibility that there might be a corporation competent to take during the life estate is too remote,<sup>93</sup> the validity of a testamentary gift to a corporation to be created or organized has been recognized where the gift is otherwise valid,<sup>94</sup> as, for example, in the case of a testamentary gift for charitable purposes or uses, as discussed in Charities § 32 Subject to rules in respect of illegal postponement of the vesting of estates or interests, discussed in Perpetuities § 66 et seq, the question of validity in such case depends largely on whether the testator contemplated the passing of title or interest immediately on his death to an existing entity or whether he actually contemplated the subsequent creation of a corporation which would take the property bequeathed or devised,<sup>95</sup> in such case, where it was the testator's intention that the estate or interest should vest in the corporation at a date subsequent to his death, within the period allowed for the future vesting of estates, and the corporation in question is then duly organized and capable of taking, the gift will be upheld if otherwise valid<sup>96</sup>

Limitation on amount While statutes sometimes impose limitations on the amount of property which a corporation may take or hold under a will, in some jurisdictions a testamentary gift to a corporation, which increases its holdings beyond the permitted amount, is not void as to the excess,<sup>97</sup> and such excess does not pass to the heirs or next of kin of the testator<sup>98</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, statutory restrictions as to the amount of property which may be taken or held render gifts void as to the excess,<sup>99</sup> and such excess passes to the heir<sup>1</sup> or next of kin<sup>2</sup> of the testator, or to the person who may be entitled to take such excess under some provision of the will<sup>3</sup> Usually the gift, if otherwise valid, is valid up to the limit of corporate capacity in this respect<sup>4</sup>

b. Who May Question Validity of Gift

In some jurisdictions, only the state may question the validity of a gift to a corporation which is in excess of its power to take or hold, but in other jurisdictions heirs at law of the testator are permitted to do so.

According to one view, the question as to the power of a corporation to acquire property by will where its charter imposes restrictions as to the amount of property which such corporation may hold and such acquisition by will would increase its holdings beyond the limits so imposed cannot be raised by private persons<sup>5</sup> but only by the state<sup>6</sup> in a direct proceeding.<sup>7</sup> Thus, the heirs at law<sup>8</sup> or the next of kin<sup>9</sup> of the testator may not successfully attack a bequest or devise on the ground here considered. These rules have been recognized or applied both where the restriction imposed is as to the amount of income which may be received from the corporate holdings<sup>10</sup> and also where the restriction imposed is as to the value of the property held,<sup>11</sup> also where the acquisition is of real property by devise<sup>12</sup> or personal property by bequest.<sup>13</sup> If the heir of the testator who devised land to a corporation is prevented from questioning the power of the corporation to hold, persons claiming through such heir are also precluded from raising the question<sup>14</sup>

In other jurisdictions, however, the view has been taken that heirs at law<sup>15</sup> or next of kin<sup>16</sup> of the testator, or any person who would be entitled to take the property under the will in the event of the incapacity of the corporation,<sup>17</sup> or in general a person whose interests will be affected,<sup>18</sup> may contest the claim of a corporation to take property in excess of the amount which it is permitted by law to hold, on the theory, according to some cases, that the particular statutory restriction is on the power to take as well as to hold,<sup>19</sup> the rule applies where the restriction constitutes a limitation either in respect of the value of the property taken or held<sup>20</sup> or in respect of the income from such property.<sup>21</sup> Even where a person other than the state may raise the question, such person may not raise the question collaterally,<sup>22</sup> and such person must be in a position to claim an interest in the property, if it is adjudged that the corporation may not<sup>23</sup>

c. Foreign Corporations

- (1) In general
- (2) Limitation on amount
- (3) Who may question validity of testamentary gift

(1) In General

Generally, foreign corporations can take a bequest of property under a will, and, if a foreign corporation has authority under its charter or the statutes of the state of its creation to take and hold land in another state, in the absence of a statute or public policy to the contrary, it may take and hold land by a devise

A foreign corporation may take and hold personal property under a bequest of a testator domiciled in a state other than that of its creation where it has power to do so under its charter or governing statutes of the state of creation and there is no prohibition of, or limitation on, the exercise of such power by the express statutory enactments or other manifestations of a contrary public policy of the state of the testator's domicile<sup>27</sup> A testamentary gift to a corporation to be formed in another state may be given effect if otherwise valid<sup>28</sup>

In determining generally the authority of a foreign corporation to take by devise, the view has been taken that, in the absence of a statute requiring it, express authority to take by devise is not necessary,<sup>29</sup> and that a corporation may take by devise if it has general power under its charter to acquire<sup>30</sup> or to hold and purchase<sup>31</sup> real property Whether a corporation has power under its charter to take land by devise is to be determined by the courts of the state in which the land is situated<sup>32</sup> A foreign corporation which has authority under its charter or governing statutes of the state<sup>33</sup> or other jurisdiction<sup>34</sup> of its creation to take and hold land situated in a state other than that of its creation, in the absence of an express statutory prohibition or limitation, or other manifestations of a contrary public policy of the domestic state, may take and hold by devise land so situated Some states have enacted statutes authorizing a foreign corporation to take by devise land situated within their limits<sup>35</sup> A foreign corporation cannot, however, take by devise where it has no power under its charter or governing statute to do so,<sup>36</sup> nor can it take contrary to any prohibitions or limitations imposed by the statutes of the state in which the land is situated,<sup>37</sup> or contrary to the otherwise established public policy of such state<sup>38</sup>

While it has been held that if the statute of wills of the state creating the corporation disables it from taking land by devise, this disability will follow it into other states, so that by reason of the disability imposed by the general statute law of the state of its domicile it will not be able so to acquire land in another state,<sup>39</sup> there is authority for the view that a provision of the statute of wills of the state of a corporation's creation prohibiting devises to corporations does not operate outside of the state so as to incapacitate the corporation from taking by devise in another state,<sup>40</sup> where, under its charter, it would be authorized to take in the absence of the prohibition in the statute of wills,<sup>41</sup> and that such corporation may take by devise where the laws of such other state authorize such taking<sup>42</sup> There is, however, authority for the view that a provision of the statute of wills of the state in which the land in question is situated invalidating a devise to a corporation unless it is expressly authorized by its charter or by statute to take by devise applies to a foreign corporation<sup>43</sup> where it is not expressly authorized by statute of such state to take by devise<sup>44</sup>

Effect of want of capacity; conversion If a foreign corporation has no power to take a devise of lands, it has been held that the title does not vest at all in the corporation<sup>45</sup> Under this rule, where the will does not by its terms effect a conversion of the real property involved into personalty, the court may not, by the application of the doctrine of equitable conversion, give effect to the will as a valid bequest of personalty to the corporation<sup>46</sup> Where, however, a will so directs or authorizes a sale of real estate by the executor as to create an equitable conversion of it into personalty and gives the proceeds to a foreign corporation, it is a bequest of personalty and valid, if the corporation is authorized to take by bequest, notwithstanding the corporation cannot take by devise<sup>47</sup> Where the foreign corporation has no capacity to take and the property is not otherwise disposed of, the land will descend to the heirs at law of the testator according to the controlling law<sup>48</sup>

Corporation civilly dead A devise to a foreign corporation has been held void on the ground that the corporation was civilly dead and had no existence<sup>49</sup>

(2) Limitation on Amount

A limitation on the amount in value of real property which a corporation may hold, imposed by a statute of the state of its creation, has been given effect in determining the validity of a devise to such corporation in another state

A limitation on the amount in value of real property which a corporation may hold, imposed by a statute of the state of its creation, has been given effect in determining the validity of a devise to such corporation in another state,<sup>50</sup> and the view has been taken that in such case title to real property devised does not vest in the corporation where it already holds property to the limit of its capacity as to amount,<sup>51</sup> but descends to the heirs at law of the testator if not otherwise disposed of by the will<sup>52</sup> Likewise, a limitation in respect of the income from property held by a foreign corporation by the laws of the state of its creation has been given effect in respect of a bequest to the corporation made by a testator domiciled in another state<sup>53</sup> Where, however, a foreign corporation, which is subject to such limitation, has capacity to take by devise or bequest, it may take by devise or bequest provided the testamentary gift does not increase the corporate holdings to an amount beyond the statutory limit<sup>54</sup> A limitation in a charter of a foreign corporation on the amount of net income which the corporation may have from real or personal property has been held not to be a limitation on the amount of real or personal property which the corporation may take by devise or bequest<sup>55</sup>

(3) Who May Question Validity of Testamentary Gift

In some jurisdictions only the state may question the validity of testamentary gifts to foreign corporations because of restrictions on the amount of corporate holdings, in others the heirs at law may do so.

The rule recognized in some jurisdictions that private persons may not raise the question as to whether, by the acquisition of property by will, a corporation will obtain holdings in excess in amount of those permitted by its charter or governing statute has been recognized or applied where the question is raised by heirs at law<sup>56</sup> or next of kin<sup>57</sup> of the testator in attacking a devise or bequest to a foreign corporation on the ground that the laws of the state by which such corporation was created impose a restriction as to the income which the corporation may receive from its holdings, and this rule has been applied even where, by the rule of the state of creation, the heirs or next of kin may raise the question<sup>58</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, the view has been taken that heirs at law<sup>59</sup>

or next of kin<sup>60</sup> of the testator may question the validity of testamentary gifts to foreign corporations because of restrictions on the amount of corporate holdings, imposed by the state by which the corporation was created

Where a foreign corporation is wholly incapacitated to take by devise in the state in which the real estate involved is situated, it has been held or recognized that the right to question the validity of a devise to such corporation is not confined to the state,<sup>61</sup> but may be exercised by heirs at law of the testator,<sup>62</sup> and a like rule has been recognized where a foreign corporation is not entitled to take by devise for the particular purpose of the devise.<sup>63</sup> The mere fact that a person has accepted a benefit under a will does not prevent his questioning the validity of a devise to a foreign corporation on the ground that the corporation is civilly dead and has no existence.<sup>64</sup>

§ 107. Other Persons or Bodies

- a In general
- b Religious societies

a. In General

A person of mixed blood, and, in the absence of statutory or constitutional prohibition, a sovereign government or a governmental body may be beneficiaries under a will

The right to take property under a will is not a natural right, but it is a creature of law. Consequently, the law has power to designate those whom the testator may make the objects of his bounty, as considered supra § 91, and designation of certain persons and societies as beneficiaries has been recognized. Thus, the right of a child of a marriage between a white person and a free colored person to take land by devise has been recognized.<sup>65</sup> At least in some states in which slavery was legal, a free negro could take by devise,<sup>66</sup> and a bequest or devise for the benefit of free negroes was not invalid.<sup>67</sup>

Governmental bodies or body politic In the absence of statutory or constitutional prohibition a sovereign government may be a beneficiary under a will,<sup>68</sup> and bequests of personal property to a body politic are valid,<sup>69</sup> but, in order to take, such government must come within the provisions of the statute with respect to who may take under a will.<sup>70</sup> Consequently, a statute excluding all except enumerated corporations from taking under a will, construed as preventing the United States from being a beneficiary, is not invalid notwithstanding a provision permitting testamentary gifts to the state itself and its subordinate municipalities.<sup>71</sup> In determining the validity of a devise of real property to a sovereign government, the law of the state in which the land is located will govern.<sup>72</sup>

b Religious Societies

As a general rule, religious corporations may take bequests and devises whenever, by the laws under which they are incorporated, such corporations have authority to acquire property by will

A religious corporation may accept bequests for uses within the scope of its charter or the law under which it was incorporated,<sup>73</sup> to an amount not exceeding that limited by statute,<sup>74</sup> unless the statute expressly prohibits it,<sup>75</sup> but it cannot take land by devise, unless and only to the extent that it is expressly authorized to do so by its charter or by statute,<sup>76</sup> although there are some early decisions to the contrary.<sup>77</sup> Authority to take by devise is not granted by a statute authorizing a religious corporation to acquire property by "conveyance"<sup>78</sup> or by "deed,"<sup>79</sup> nor is a power to take by will conferred by a granted power to receive "subscriptions or contributions in money or otherwise"<sup>80</sup>

Whether a religious corporation can take property by devise in a particular case will depend on the terms of the statute granting the power and the nature of the use for which the property is devised, and where the terms of the charter of the corporation or of the statute under which it was incorporated conflict with the terms of a later general law in this respect, the terms of the charter or earlier incorporating statute control.<sup>81</sup> Under a constitutional provision permitting devises for limited purposes to a "religious sect, order or denomination," a local congregation uncontrolled by any general ecclesiastical organization is capable of receiving a devise.<sup>82</sup> A corporation having authority to take by devise only for its own use cannot take under the statute for any other use,<sup>83</sup> although it has been held that where a religious corporation is prohibited from taking real estate by devise, the prohibition does not invalidate a testamentary trust for purposes personal to the testator, merely because the church was named as trustee in the will.<sup>84</sup> Especially where a taking by devise for the excluded purposes is expressly prohibited, the power to take by

devise is strictly confined to the purposes included in the statute.<sup>85</sup> In jurisdictions where the English statute of charitable uses is not in force as a part of the common law, the power of the religious corporation to accept devises of property or trust is restricted to purposes declared as lawful by the local statute,<sup>86</sup> and on the terms laid down by the local law.<sup>87</sup>

Where the statute expressly provides that no religious corporation, body, or society shall take under a will, both devises and bequests to a religious society are void,<sup>88</sup> and whether the testamentary gift is a devise of real estate or a bequest of the proceeds of real estate is immaterial, both being by will and so prohibited by the law.<sup>89</sup> Where, however, the prohibition extends to devises of real estate only, bequests of personal estate are valid,<sup>90</sup> and inasmuch as a prohibition of devises to religious corporations does not invalidate a devise to such corporation in trust for purposes personal to the testator,<sup>91</sup> a religious corporation prohibited from taking a devise of real estate may take by will an estate including both real and personal estate, where the real estate can be applied under the terms of the will to other than church purposes, and the personal estate appropriated for the church.<sup>92</sup>

A devise of realty,<sup>93</sup> or a bequest of personalty,<sup>94</sup> to an unincorporated religious society has been held to be void. A religious corporation, however, having been incorporated during the life of the heir under a will, by which the devise to the corporation

Foreign corporations In the absence of statute in the state of testator's domicile forbidding bequests to foreign religious organizations, such foreign organization may take devises and legacies under the will of a resident of another state, whenever, by the laws under which they are incorporated, such corporations have authority to acquire property by will, unless the devises or legacies are repugnant to the laws of the other state<sup>96</sup> A religious society incorporated by another state can by comity have no better title to take property by devise than domestic corporations in that state<sup>97</sup> A resident, however, can make a legatee a foreign religious corporation not licensed to do business in the state of the testator, notwithstanding constitutional provision requiring foreign corporations to have a resident agent and forbidding greater rights than those possessed by domestic corporations<sup>98</sup> Where a foreign corporation may not hold land, or any interest in land, if a will directs a conversion of the realty into personalty a bequest of the proceeds to foreign religious corporation is valid<sup>99</sup>

§ 108. Restrictions on Testamentary Disposition for Charitable, Benevolent, or Religious Purposes

Restrictions on testamentary dispositions have bearing on the time within which a will must be executed prior to the testator's death, on the amount bequested, or on the time during which title to the land so devised can be held

Some statutes have been enacted providing in effect that a devise or bequest for religious or charitable purposes or to a religious, charitable, and a like corporation or other organization must, in order to be valid, be made by a will executed a specific time before the testator's death, as discussed infra § 109, or restricting, to a specified fractional share of his estate the amount which a testator may devise or bequeath to such organizations or for such purposes, infra § 110 In some states there are no other limitations on the right of a person to dispose of his property for charitable uses<sup>1</sup> In the absence of statutory or constitutional provisions in this regard, no limitations on testamentary capacity of the types here considered are applicable<sup>2</sup>

In Mississippi under the constitutional and statutory provisions charitable, religious, and educational institutions may be beneficiaries under a will, but they can hold title to land so devised only for a fixed period of time<sup>3</sup> Prior to the enactment of these provisions, the provisions which invalidated devises and bequests of land or interests in land, or of money directed to be raised by the sale of land, for religious or charitable purposes,<sup>4</sup> and bequests of personal property in favor of religious or ecclesiastical organizations or to such organizations or religious denominations, for their own use or benefit or for charitable uses,<sup>5</sup> were restrictions on testamentary capacity, and the purpose of such provisions was to prevent a testator from disregarding the interests of his heirs<sup>6</sup> The view was ap-

a. In General

Certain statutes invalidate testamentary gifts for charitable, benevolent, or like uses, contained in wills executed within a specified time prior to the testator's death.

Some statutes invalidate testamentary gifts for charitable, benevolent, or like uses, contained in wills executed within a specified period prior to the death of the testator,<sup>15</sup> and the courts have asserted or sustained the constitutionality of such a statute.<sup>16</sup> Some of these statutes invalidate all gifts for the purposes specified, or to the corporations or institutions designated, where the will is executed within the prescribed period.<sup>17</sup> On the

Gift pursuant to an oral agreement

(1) Where husband and wife made a binding agreement, in presence of attorney, that survivor would will property owned by them as tenants by entireties to charitable institutions connected with certain church, and in 1941 after death of husband, wife executed will leaving property to charitable institutions of that church, and in 1947 wife revoked 1941 will, and named different charities of that church, and died within thirty days, bequests were not void

Pa—In re Gredler's Estate, 65 A 2d 404, 361 Pa 384.

(2) A gift to a charitable institution executed within the proscribed period is not invalid where the gift is the confirmation of a trust which was already in existence by oral declaration between the testator and his spouse

Pa—In re Heim's Estate, 50 Pa Dist & Co 239, 45 Lack Jur 113.

Questions of proof

(1) Charitable or religious institutions claiming bequests or devises must show that they were made more than thirty days before testator's death, there being no equities as between them and next of kin of testator, and rights of each being such only as are given by statute.

other hand, some statutes apply when,<sup>18</sup> and only when,<sup>19</sup> specified relatives or heirs survive the testator, and when the person named in the statute is not benefited by the invalidation of the proscribed gift, the effect is the same as though there had been no statute in the first place and the gift to the benevolent, religious, educational, or charitable institution is valid.<sup>20</sup> Such a statute does not render illegal the mere act of making a will for a charitable or benevolent purpose,<sup>21</sup> nor does it invalidate a trust completed within the settlor's lifetime, although the trust is referred to, and incorporated in, the settlor's will.<sup>22</sup> Some statutes do not completely outlaw charitable gifts, even where a will is made within the proscribed period, and such gifts are not invalid but merely voidable.<sup>23</sup>

While there is authority for the view that a statute of the type here considered, which is repealed intermediate the death of the testator and the happening of a contingency on which the vesting of a testamentary gift in a will executed within the statutory period depended, does not have operative force so as to invalidate such contingent gift, as considered infra, subdivision d of this section, according to some cases the question as to the invalidity of a gift, under this type of statute, is determined by the state of facts existing at the time of the testator's death.<sup>24</sup> The mere fact that one of the purposes for which a testamentary gift is made is not for a charitable or religious purpose does not save the gift from the operation of the statute where another of the purposes is charitable or religious and the gift is not separable.<sup>25</sup> Land purchased by the testator within the period fixed by a statute of the type here considered may pass by a will executed beyond such period.<sup>26</sup>

In some jurisdictions, at least, there is no public policy, outside of specific statutory provisions, which condemns testamentary gifts to charitable, benevolent, and like institutions contained in a will executed within any particular period prior to the testator's death,<sup>27</sup> and in the absence of any statutory or constitutional provision in this regard no limitation on testamentary capacity of the type here considered is applicable.<sup>28</sup>

Computation of time Where the period fixed by the statute is "at least one calendar month" before the decease of the testator, the number of days in the calendar month is determined by the number of days in the month in which the will is executed.<sup>29</sup> The month is a month of full, clear days without counting hours or fractions of days,<sup>30</sup> and a fraction of a day may not be counted as a

(3) When a will or codicil is undated there is no presumption either for or against its having been executed within thirty days of decedent's death, and in such case, in order to sustain a charitable bequest the beneficiary must affirmatively prove by the weight of competent evidence that the will or codicil was actually executed more than thirty days prior to testator's death

b. Nature and Purpose of Statutes and General Rules of Construction

The statutes in question operate as a limitation on the testator's power of disposition, and their purpose is to prevent improvident testamentary gifts to the exclusion of the testator's lawful heirs when the testator is weak and in apprehension of death. In general, such statutes are to be strictly construed.

While some statutes of the type here considered have been regarded as limitations on the power of a charitable corporation to take property under a will,<sup>32</sup> the view has been taken that such a statute operates as a limitation on the testator's power of disposition<sup>33</sup> and not on the beneficiary's power to take.<sup>34</sup> There is authority for the view that there is no principle of right or of public policy involved in such a statute,<sup>35</sup> and that the purpose of such a statute is to prevent improvident testamentary gifts to the exclusion of the testator's lawful heirs and next of kin<sup>36</sup> when the testator is weak and in apprehension of death,<sup>37</sup> or, as sometimes stated, it is intended to prevent a testator, under the fears incident to death, from disposing of his estate to the prejudice of his descendants.<sup>38</sup> It is generally held that such statutes are to be strictly construed.<sup>39</sup> The general rule that such construction as will prevent intestacy will be adopted rather than one which will render the will invalid has been given effect in holding that a certain gift contained in a will executed within a certain period prior to the testator's death was not within the purview of a statute of the type here considered.<sup>40</sup> Since it is a limitation on the power of testamentary disposition, this type of statute should be strictly construed in favor of such power.<sup>41</sup>

c. Subsequent Will or Codicil Executed within Statutory Period

A gift in a subsequent will executed within the proscribed period is void, notwithstanding a similarity in the provisions with a previous will executed beyond the statutory period, but if the last will does not change the testamentary purpose, the gift is valid. A codicil executed within the statutory period does not invalidate gifts in a will made beyond the proscribed period, unless the language of the codicil clearly so indicates.

contains gifts for charitable purposes which are void because the revoking will was executed within the statutory period, a prior will containing charitable gifts, which was executed beyond the statutory period, may not be given effect in respect of gifts for particular charities for which gifts were made in both wills,<sup>42</sup> and where a will executed within the statutory period contains a gift which is invalid under the statute, the fact that such gift is identical with a gift contained in a codicil to an earlier will does not render the gift effective, notwithstanding the codicil was executed beyond the statutory period.<sup>43</sup> So, also, the mere fact that in a will revoking an earlier will there is a reference to a gift for charitable purposes contained in the earlier will does not save such gift from the general revocation clause of the later will and thereby prevent the application of the statutory limitation where the gift in the later will is different in amount and in the manner of distribution from that contained in the earlier will.<sup>44</sup> Likewise, a gift in a will executed within the proscribed period is void, notwithstanding a similarity in the provisions of such will and a previous will executed beyond the statutory period.<sup>45</sup> Where, however, the last will, although executed within the proscribed period, does not change the testamentary purpose the gift is valid.<sup>46</sup>

Codicil executed within statutory period A gift contained in a codicil executed within the statutory period may be void under a statute of the type here considered.<sup>47</sup> Notwithstanding the general rules that a codicil which refers to a will constitutes a republication of the will and that both will and codicil speak from the date of the codicil, as considered infra § 303, according to some cases a codicil executed within the statutory period does not operate to avoid gifts to charities in a will executed beyond the statutory period, in the absence from the codicil of language clearly showing an intention that the codicil shall so operate.<sup>48</sup> So, a codicil executed within the statutory period usually does not invalidate gifts contained in the will which are otherwise valid where the codicil does not make any effective gift,<sup>49</sup> or where the codicil does not change or touch the gifts in the will.<sup>50</sup>

The mere fact that the codicil recites that it revokes a charitable gift in the will does not operate to bring the gift within the operation of the statute where, in fact, it appears from the terms of the codicil that there is not an actual revocation of the whole gift.<sup>51</sup> Where, however, by a codicil executed within the statutory period, gifts to organizations subject to the statute are revoked and a different distribution to the same organizations is provided for, the statute has been given effect to invalidate gifts.<sup>52</sup> While, under some statutes, a codicil executed within the statutory period which by revoking legacies in the will increases the amount of a residuary gift for charitable purposes contained in the will has been held ineffective as to such increase,<sup>53</sup> the view has been taken that the fact that a codicil executed within the statutory period by revoking a bequest to one other than one whom the statute was designed to protect increased the residuary estate which was given for purposes within the statute by a will executed beyond the statutory period did not invalidate the residuary gift to the extent of the revoked bequest<sup>54</sup> on the ground that neither the spirit nor the letter of the statute involved condemned such codicil.<sup>55</sup>

A codicil executed within the statutory period which merely reduces,<sup>56</sup> or postpones the time of enjoyment of,<sup>57</sup> a charitable gift contained in a will executed beyond the statutory period is not within the statute. An instrument is regarded as a codicil, within the meaning of this rule, even though it is a will in form and the language of the instrument refers to it as a will, if in effect it is a codicil<sup>58</sup>

The question as to whether or not a provision in a codicil decreases the amount of a charitable gift within the foregoing rule is determinable as of the date of the execution of the codicil,<sup>59</sup> and where a will executed beyond the statutory period contained a gift of all the residuary estate for a specified charitable purpose and a codicil executed within the statutory period gave only half the residuary estate for the same purpose, the fact that the gift in the codicil might in actual amount be greater at the time of execution of such codicil than the amount of the whole residuary estate when the will was executed does not in some jurisdictions at least of itself invalidate the gift<sup>60</sup>

A provision in a codicil executed within the statutory period that, in the event of the testator's decease prior to the expiration of the time prescribed by law which must elapse after making of a will before charitable gifts thereunder become valid and enforceable, a portion of the estate given for a charitable purpose is given to a person named is applicable only if the charitable gift should fail,<sup>61</sup> and where such gift is upheld because the codicil is regarded as diminishing the amount of the charitable gift, the person named does not take<sup>62</sup> A codicil actually executed within the statutory period may, by its terms, render operative the earlier of two wills already executed by the testator, provided he should die before a specified date, and thus give effect to charitable gifts in such earlier will where the will was executed beyond the statutory period<sup>63</sup>

d. What Law Governs; Foreign Corporations

Although statutes restricting gifts to charitable or religious corporations of the state of the testator's domicile may be given effect by courts of another state, with respect to real estate located in another state, the law of the situs determines the validity of the gift.

It seems that a statute of the type here considered of the state of the testator's domicile may be given effect by courts of another state,<sup>64</sup> and a statutory provision of this type which is applicable to any charitable or benevolent society or corporation has been applied in declaring invalid a bequest by a person domiciled in the state in which the statute is enacted to a state institution of a foreign country<sup>65</sup> A statute of one state, of the type here considered, has been given effect in declaring void a devise to a corporation of such state of land in another state, contained in a will executed within the statutory period<sup>66</sup> While there is authority to the contrary,<sup>67</sup> it has been held or recognized, on the ground that the statute in question imposes restrictions on the power of testamentary disposition and not on the power of the beneficiary to take, that a statute of the type here considered applies only to testators domiciled within the state in which the statute has been enacted<sup>68</sup> and does not apply to bequests to a corporation domiciled within such state made by a testator domiciled in another state<sup>69</sup> and that such corporation may take the bequest if otherwise authorized to take where there is no statute of the testator's domicile forbidding the bequest<sup>70</sup> Where the statute is by its terms applicable to certain corporations organized under the laws of the state in which it was enacted, it may not be extended to include testamentary gifts to foreign corporations otherwise authorized to take<sup>71</sup> on any theory of an established public policy of the state<sup>72</sup> With respect to the real estate located in

Compelling reason

Where resident of foreign state dies seized of Texas lands and his will makes a devise of remainder in another state, the law of the situs determines the validity of the gift <sup>73</sup>

Repeal of statute In the absence of a provision to the contrary, in determining the effect of the repeal of a statute of the type here involved, it has been laid down that the validity of a bequest is to be determined as of the date of the testator's death<sup>74</sup> and that, where the testator dies before such repeal, the statute invalidated a present bequest within the statute in a will executed within the statutory period,<sup>75</sup> but it has been held that, where the statute was repealed intermediate the death of the testator and the happening of the contingency on which the vesting of a testamentary gift in a will executed within the statutory period depended, the repealed statute did not operate to invalidate the gift <sup>76</sup>

e. Devisees or Legatees within Statute

The devisees or legatees which are within a statute imposing a time limitation with respect to the execution of a will containing dispositions for charitable, benevolent, or religious purposes depend on the terms of the statute.

The devisees or legatees which are within a statute imposing a time limitation with respect to the execution of a will containing dispositions for charitable, benevolent, or religious purposes depend on the terms of the statute<sup>77</sup> Some statutes of the type here considered are expressly applicable to gifts to charitable, religious, educational, or civil institutions<sup>78</sup> Other statutes expressly apply to any charitable or benevolent society or corporation,<sup>79</sup>

and the view has been expressed that there is no substantial difference between the words "charitable" and "benevolent" as used in such statutory provision<sup>80</sup> In construing the statute a "charitable corporation" has been defined as one organized for the purpose, among other things, of promoting the welfare of mankind at large, or of a community, or of some class forming a part of it indefinite as to numbers and individuals<sup>81</sup> Accordingly, in order that a corporation may be regarded as a "charitable corporation" within the meaning of such a statute, it is essential that its facilities or funds should be used for the public benefit, either for the entire public or for some particular class of persons, indefinite in number, who constitute a part of the public<sup>82</sup> A corporation which is organized and conducted for the mutual assistance to its members in the event of sickness is not a "charitable" or "benevolent" society or corporation within the meaning of the statute<sup>83</sup>

Under the construction given a statute authorizing the incorporation of certain organizations, all corporations organized under the statute are not necessarily "charitable" or "benevolent" associations or corporations within the meaning of another statute imposing a time limitation in respect of the execution of a will containing gifts to "charitable" or "benevolent" societies or corporations<sup>84</sup> Even though a particular organization, which has attempted to incorporate under such statute authorizing incorporation, is not authorized to incorporate there-

under, the character of the organization, as a de facto corporation or as a voluntary association, will be determined by its articles and by laws and its conduct and acts in pursuance thereof, and if these show that it is not a charitable or benevolent organization, it will not be regarded as such for the purpose of invalidating a gift to it contained in a will executed within the statutory period<sup>85</sup> The mere fact that the gift contained in a will executed within the statutory period is made by the testator from motives of benevolence does not render void a gift to an organization which is not a charitable or benevolent society or corporation<sup>86</sup>

f. Type or Form of Gift

- (1) In general
- (2) Gift subject to moral obligation as to application

(1) In General

Whether or not a particular gift comes within the operation of a statute of the type here considered depends largely on the terms of the particular statute

Whether or not a particular gift comes within the operation of a statute of the type here considered depends largely on the terms of the particular statute<sup>88</sup> Under some statutes of this type, where a gift is not to a charitable or benevolent society or corporation, it is necessary that it shall be a gift in trust for a charitable use in order that it may be within the operation of the statute<sup>89</sup> The term "charitable uses," as used in such a statute, is, according to some cases, to be taken in its legal and technical sense,<sup>90</sup> and not in a restricted or popular

sense,<sup>91</sup> and, in general, it seems, if a gift may be regarded as a testamentary gift for a charitable use for the purpose of sustaining it, it is to be regarded as a gift for such a use within the terms of the statute<sup>92</sup> So, it has been said that one of the essential features of a "charitable use" is that it shall be for the public benefit either for the entire public or for some particular class of persons indefinite in number who constitute a part of the public<sup>93</sup> In determining whether or not a gift is in trust for a charitable use within the meaning of a statute which is applicable to such a gift, the view has been expressed that the purpose and motive of the testator are immaterial<sup>94</sup>

Where such a statute invalidates gifts for "religious uses," the term "religious" has been given its broadest meaning which comprehends all systems of belief in the existence of beings superior to, and capable of exercising an influence for good or evil on, the human race, and all forms of worship or service intended to influence or give honor to such superior powers,<sup>95</sup> and the operation of the statute is not confined to the "religious uses" of a Christian organization<sup>96</sup> The estate bequeathed for religious uses need not be money or tangible property, but it may be the release of a debt, or a limitation on the power of executors which confers a benefit on the legatee<sup>97</sup>

Among other gifts which have been held or recognized to be invalid as gifts for charitable uses are gifts for the purposes of a public library,<sup>98</sup> for the building of a college or university with library and the purchase of books for the library,<sup>99</sup> for the benefit of a denominational school,<sup>1</sup> for the building of a chapel to be controlled by the trustees of a specified church,<sup>2</sup> for the publication and distribution of certain books,<sup>3</sup> for the construction by a municipal corporation of a pleasure pier,<sup>4</sup> for the repair of a graveyard,<sup>5</sup> for beautifying a cemetery for the burial of persons of a particular religious denomination,<sup>6</sup> to a college for the education generally of clergymen of a particular denomination,<sup>7</sup> to a religious society,<sup>8</sup> to an unincorporated association organized for charitable and benevolent purposes, whose benevolence extends to an indefinite number of nonmembers,<sup>9</sup> to the consul of a foreign government for the benefit of such government,<sup>10</sup> to a private hospital,<sup>11</sup> to establish a free bed in a private hospital,<sup>12</sup> and, apparently, the gift of the use of certain property to a religious and science association<sup>13</sup>

Among other gifts which have been held or recognized to be invalid as gifts for religious uses are a gift to a religious society,<sup>14</sup> a gift for the salary of a clergyman of a particular church,<sup>15</sup> and a gift for Sunday school purposes of a particular church<sup>16</sup> Where the statute in question applies to gifts for both religious and charitable uses, certain gifts have been held void without a definite characterization of the gift involved as either religious or charitable<sup>17</sup>

Among other gifts which, it has been held or recognized, are not invalidated by a statute applicable to gifts for charitable or religious uses are a bequest in trust for the education for the ministry of a relative of the testator,<sup>18</sup> a gift to a political party,<sup>19</sup> a bequest of a definite sum for the erection of a family monument in a cemetery,<sup>20</sup> a gift for the care and upkeep of a cemetery lot or of family graves,<sup>21</sup> gifts to a beneficial association whose benevolence and benefits are confined exclusively to members,<sup>22</sup> or to members and their wives and children,<sup>23</sup> gifts to organizations which maintain homes for aged, indigent, and dependent members of certain fraternal organizations,<sup>24</sup> and for the widows and wives of members,<sup>25</sup> where the right to admission is contractual So the view has been taken that a gift for the construction of a college or university with library and for books for the library is not for a religious use within the meaning of such statute where no purpose or design expressed by the testator has any particular reference to religion<sup>26</sup> So, a statute which applies to gifts in trust for charitable uses does not invalidate a bequest of personal property on a condition subsequent that the legatee shall keep a certain horse as long as the horse lives<sup>27</sup>

Exclusion of specified relative. Where a statute applies to gifts made to the exclusion of a surviving wife, or child, the will effects such exclusion where it merely gives a life estate to a child with remainder over to an institution<sup>28</sup>

Gifts for masses. The view has been taken that a gift to a church for masses for the benefit and repose of the soul of the testator is not a gift for charitable use within the meaning of a statute of the type here considered,<sup>29</sup> but it has been held that a gift for masses is a gift for religious uses and, therefore, void if the will was executed within the period fixed by a statute applicable to such uses<sup>30</sup>

within the operation of the statute it must be both in trust and for a charitable use, it has been held that the statute does not apply to a gift to the person who should be the pastor in charge of a specified church at the time of the testator's death of a portion of the estate to be used by such person to procure the saying of masses for the repose of the testator's soul, because there is no trust<sup>31</sup>

Bequest contingent on extinction of lineal descendants Notwithstanding the invalidity of a gift under some statutes is dependent on the existence of lineal descendants, natural or adopted, at the death of the testator, since the use of the void gift is not preserved to lineal descendants, anyone interested in the descent and distribution of the estate may assert the invalidity of a bequest, as discussed infra subdivision g of this section, and such a statute may apply to a bequest contingent on the extinction of lineal descendants<sup>32</sup>

Exercise of power of appointment A testamentary gift for charitable purposes made in the exercise of a power of appointment has been held to be invalidated by a statute of the type here considered, where the will was executed within the specified period prior to the testator's death<sup>33</sup> notwithstanding the will creating the power of appointment was executed beyond such period<sup>34</sup>

Statutory exceptions Under an exception from the operation of a statute of this type, of the disposition of property within the specified period, bona fide made for a fair valuable consideration, the mere execution of the conditions and directions of the bequest itself does not constitute consideration so as to take the bequest out of the operation of the statute.<sup>35</sup> A bequest to a municipal corporation for the purpose of constructing a pleasure pier is not a gift "for the use or benefit of the state" within the meaning of a statutory provision excepting from the operation of a statute of the type here considered bequests or devises "to the state, or any state institution, or for the use or benefit of the state"<sup>36</sup>

(2) Gift Subject to Moral Obligation as to Application

A will executed within the statutory period is valid where the donee is not bound in law to apply the gift to a purpose within the statute, but if the purpose of the will is to evade the statute by any secret trust for charitable and religious uses, the gift is void

An absolute gift in a will which was executed within the statutory period has been upheld where the donee is not bound in law to apply the gift to a purpose within the statute, even though the gift is actually intended for such purpose,<sup>37</sup> giving effect to the will results in an evasion of the statute,<sup>38</sup> and the donee is under a moral duty so to apply the gift<sup>39</sup> The rule has been recognized or applied where the absolute gift is in the alternative and its operative effect depends on the testator's death within the statutory period and where, if the testator had survived the statutory period, the property involved would go to the charity under the terms of the will<sup>40</sup> The statute may not, however, be evaded by any secret trust for charitable and religious uses,<sup>41</sup> and where there is an implied agreement at the time the will is executed, binding on the donee of a gift absolute in form, to apply the gift to a purpose within the statute, a trust arises and the statute renders the gift void if the will was executed within the statutory period<sup>42</sup>

g. Who Protected by, and Entitled to Question Validity under, Statute; Waiver

Persons for whose benefit statutes of the type under consideration operate may assert the invalidity of a gift, but they may also waive or relinquish such benefit.

While the view has been expressed that the object of a statute, the operative effect of which is dependent on the existence of lineal descendants of the testator, is to protect the testator's direct issue,<sup>43</sup> or more specifically, is designed for the special protection of the children or issue of the body, or adopted child of the testator and their representatives,<sup>44</sup> it has been recognized that such statute may inure to the benefit of others,<sup>45</sup> and that anyone interested in the descent and distribution of the estate may assert the invalidity of a bequest, where the statute is operative because of the survival of persons designated.<sup>46</sup> Some gifts may be avoided at the instance of an aggrieved heir of a designated class who would have been entitled to take the property had it not been willed to charity.<sup>47</sup> Where the operation of the statute does not depend on the survival of any particular relatives, heirs, or next of kin, it seems that in general any person who might be entitled to a share of the estate may assert the invalidity of a gift, under the statute.<sup>48</sup> A charitable institution, however, to which a remainder interest was devised by the will, executed within the proscribed period invalidating such devise, has no standing whatsoever to question the validity of the distribution of the assets.<sup>49</sup>

Waiver, and confirmation of gift within statute by person benefited by statute There is authority for the view, in respect of some statutes of this type, that, since such a statute is a limitation on the power of testamentary disposition and there is no principle of right or of public policy involved, as discussed supra subdivision b of this section, the person for whose benefit the statute operates may waive or relinquish the benefit,<sup>50</sup> which renders the gift valid.<sup>51</sup> So, the validity of a provision in a will giving to such person the discretionary power to confirm a gift which is within the operation of the statute because of the testator's death within the statutory period has been recognized or upheld,<sup>52</sup> and the exercise of this power may, pursuant to the will, defeat a gift over to third persons of the property so made subject to the power.<sup>53</sup> The mere fact, however, that a person has accepted a benefit under a will does not prevent his questioning the validity of a gift in the will to a charitable institution on the ground that the will was executed within the statutory period.<sup>54</sup> Assuming that persons interested in the estate of the testator may waive the benefit of the statute, there is no waiver where such persons, in litigation subsequent to the probate of the will, attack the validity of gifts alleged to be subject to the statutory limitation,<sup>55</sup> such persons are not estopped to attack the validity of the gifts by the fact that the will was probated, where the validity of the gifts was not in issue in the probate proceedings.<sup>56</sup> The heirs are not required, in order to avoid waiver of the statute, to have contested the will, or its validity, within the statutory period,<sup>57</sup> and such heirs, who did not appear in the probate proceedings or file objections to the petition for distribution, but assert their rights by an appeal from the decree of distribution, do not waive, forfeit, or lose their rights to insist that the charitable bequests be limited to the statutory share.<sup>58</sup>

h. Devolution of Property Where Gift Invalid

In general, property included in a testamentary gift which is void under a statute of the type here considered passes as intestate property where it is not otherwise disposed of by the will

In general, property included in a testamentary gift which is void under a statute of the type here considered passes as intestate property where it is not otherwise disposed of by the will,<sup>59</sup> but such void gifts may pass under a residuary clause if that is the intention of the testator<sup>60</sup> Some of these statutes specifically provide that dispositions of property which are void under the statute shall go to the residuary legatee or devisee, next of kin, or heirs, according to law,<sup>61</sup> and, under such statute, where there is no residuary legatee or devisee<sup>62</sup> entitled to take,<sup>63</sup> usually the property goes to the next of kin or heirs according to law The view has been taken, however, that such statutory provision for disposition of the property as stated "according to law" means to one or the other as the case may be, under the existing law of distribution<sup>64</sup> The general rule of construction against intestacy has been applied<sup>65</sup> in holding that, where no residuary legatee was named and the will evidenced a clear intention to dispose of the whole of the testator's estate, the property covered by the void gift should be applied to the payment of the general legacies until the general legatees should receive the amount given them by the will<sup>66</sup> and that the balance of the void gift, if any, would go to the next of kin<sup>67</sup>

to the contrary a void gift of a share of the residuary estate passes to the heirs or next of kin,<sup>68</sup> under the above statutory provision for the disposal of void gifts, it has been held that property covered by a void bequest of a share of the residuary estate passes to the other residuary legatees in proportion to their respective interests in the residuary fund by virtue of a general statute so providing in respect of void residuary gifts<sup>69</sup> Such general statute does not apply where the devisees are life tenant and remainderman respectively and the devise of the remainder is void because the will was executed within the statutory period<sup>70</sup>

In some jurisdictions, in determining the devolution of property included in a gift void because the will was executed within the statutory period, where the residuary clause admits of a limited application as well as a more general application, it is given a construction which is more favorable to the heir at law<sup>71</sup> Where the residuary clause is limited in terms to the balance that remains after the payment of certain legacies from a fund derived from particular property, the amount of the void legacies does not pass under such clause,<sup>72</sup> but is subject, as property undisposed of, to the statutes of descent and distribution.<sup>73</sup>

Some statutes impose restrictions as to the share of the estate which a testator may devise or bequeath for charitable, benevolent, and like purposes if he leaves specified heirs, and no bequest is valid in excess of the specified share

Some statutes impose restrictions as to the share of his estate which a testator may devise or bequeath for charitable, benevolent, and like purposes if he leaves specified heirs,<sup>74</sup> and where more than the share permitted is devised or bequeathed and the statutory restriction is otherwise applicable, the gift will be declared void or ineffective as to the excess if the question is duly raised.<sup>75</sup> Under some statutes, if certain specified relatives survive, no bequest of the type designated shall be valid in excess of a specified share of the estate after payment of debts,<sup>76</sup> but if the excess is inconsequential, it comes within the maxim de minimis non curat lex, and such gift will be sustained.<sup>77</sup> Under other statutes a gift in excess of the specified share is wholly void,<sup>78</sup> notwithstanding other statutes enable the court of chancery to effectuate a testator's purpose by approximation "in a manner most similar to that indicated by the testator" or "in a manner next most consonant with the specified mode prescribed."<sup>79</sup>

Statutes here considered do not prohibit charitable gifts altogether,<sup>80</sup> and do not compel the testator to give his property, or any part of it, to his relatives,<sup>81</sup> and when specified relatives do not survive the testator, or they waive the restriction, there is no limitation as to the amount left to charity.<sup>82</sup> Most of these statutes regulate and control testamentary disposition only.<sup>83</sup> The view has been expressed that the will is to be read as though the statutory restriction is a part of it.<sup>84</sup> In the absence of statute or constitutional provision in this regard no limitation as to the amount which a testator may give for charitable, benevolent, and like purposes is applicable.<sup>85</sup>

b. Nature, Purpose, and General Rules of Construction of Statutes

Statutes which restrict the amount of the gift to charitable institutions are not mortmain acts. Their purpose is to prevent improvident gifts to the exclusion of the testator's lawful heirs, and are usually strictly construed.

mortmain acts<sup>86</sup> directed at charities<sup>87</sup> The purpose of such a statute is to protect the natural objects of the testator's bounty from the making of improvident gifts to their neglect<sup>88</sup> or, as sometimes stated, to prevent improvident gifts to the exclusion of the testator's lawful heirs<sup>89</sup> So it is usually considered that such a statute is not a declaration of public policy against dispositions in favor of charities,<sup>90</sup> the prohibition is not made in the public interest but only for the prevention of what the statute regards as a private wrong<sup>91</sup> Accordingly, these statutes usually constitute a limitation on testamentary power,<sup>92</sup> and do not disqualify the devisee or legatee to take the testamentary gift<sup>93</sup> The statutes do not operate on the capacity of corporations, institutions, or individuals to take charitable testamentary gifts,<sup>94</sup> or prescribe or limit the amount or kind of property a corporation may take,<sup>95</sup> and, therefore, they are not arbitrary and discriminatory<sup>96</sup> On the other hand, the view has been taken that a statute of this type is not designed to establish charitable uses as they were known at common law,<sup>97</sup> and that it does not authorize any particular character of persons to accept a gift made by devise or bequest<sup>98</sup>

extended beyond the express language used,<sup>99</sup> and may not by judicial interpretation be made to include that which, by fair construction, is excluded,<sup>1</sup> the view has also been expressed that such statute should be liberally construed to effectuate the humanitarian purpose of the statute, namely, the protection of the testator's family<sup>2</sup> The fact that one of the persons named therein, on whose survival the operation of the statute depends, has an ample estate of his own does not authorize a construction of the statute favorable to a charitable or benevolent organization claiming under the will<sup>3</sup>

Furthermore, it has been laid down that such statute is to be strictly construed in favor of the persons named in the statute,<sup>4</sup> but not in favor of any other person,<sup>5</sup> also, that such statute should be strictly construed against those who seek to invalidate testamentary provisions<sup>6</sup> Unless express and unmistakable declarations of public policy forbid, an interpretation consonant with the testator's real purpose should be adopted<sup>7</sup> It is the exclusion by a testator of those persons who come within the express terms of a statute which provides that no person leaving a wife or child or descendants of a child shall devise more than a certain share of the estate to certain institutions to the exclusion of such wife or child which is prohibited<sup>8</sup> In general, a statute of this type speaks as of the time of the death of the testator,<sup>9</sup> and not as of the date of the execution of the will<sup>10</sup>

c. Survivorship of Particular Relatives or Heirs

Statutes restricting gifts to charities usually apply if specified heirs survive the testator. The burden of proof as to the survival of specified relatives is on those who attack the validity of the gift.

A statute imposing a restriction as to the share of a testator's estate which may be given to certain organizations or for certain purposes, which, in terms, refers to a testator, leaving heirs<sup>11</sup> or his having certain specified relatives,<sup>12</sup> does not apply if the testator is not survived by such heirs or relatives, and in the absence of these surviving heirs or relatives, the will may dispose of the bulk<sup>13</sup> or the whole<sup>14</sup> of his estate to charitable or benevolent and like organizations, or for charitable or benevolent and like purposes or uses. In reaching this conclusion the view has been taken that a statutory provision that no person "having" certain specified relations shall by his or her last will and testament devise or bequeath to certain societies, associations, or corporations more than a specified share of his or her estate speaks as of the death of the testator or testatrix and not as of the time of the execution of the will,<sup>15</sup> and, therefore, does not apply where none of the specified relatives survives the testator,<sup>16</sup> notwithstanding such relative or relatives were in existence when the will was made.<sup>17</sup> As bearing on the applicability of the statute, the death of a relative named in the statute simultaneously with the testator is in effect the same as death before the testator's death.<sup>18</sup>

In general, the burden of proving that one or more of the designated heirs or relatives survived the testator is on those who attack the validity of the gift under the statute.<sup>19</sup> Where the applicability of the statute depends on the survival of a particular relative of the testator and such relative and the testator perished in a common disaster, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, there is no presumption of survivorship in the absence of proof tending to show the order of death,<sup>20</sup> the courts treat the matter as though the deaths occurred simultaneously.<sup>21</sup>

Particular survivors. As already pointed out whether or not a statute imposing restrictions as to the disposable share is applicable usually at least depends on the survivorship of certain specific relatives or heirs. Some statutory restrictions of this type specify the husband, wife, child, descendants, or parent of the testator or testatrix,<sup>22</sup> others specify spouse, brother, sister, nephew, niece, descendant or ancestor.<sup>23</sup> "Child," as used in such a statute, has been construed to include an illegitimate child<sup>24</sup> and also an adopted child,<sup>25</sup> but not a grandchild.<sup>26</sup> Where the statute includes a surviving wife, it applies to a widow, although she was living apart from the testator at the time of his death,<sup>27</sup> and a like rule applies where a husband survives the testatrix notwithstanding she had obtained a divorce from bed and board.<sup>28</sup> quests of personal property. Some statutes apply to testamentary gifts to foreign corporations.

In general, a statute of this kind which is in force at the time of the testator's death governs,<sup>29</sup> and an amendment of such statute will not affect gifts in a will of the testator who died before the amendment became operative.<sup>30</sup> Some statutes of the type here considered relate only to domestic corporations,<sup>31</sup> and, therefore, impliedly eliminate from their operation gifts to foreign corporations contained in the will of a testator domiciled in the state in which the statute has been enacted.<sup>32</sup> Such a statute may not arbitrarily be extended to include gifts to foreign corporations,<sup>33</sup> and it seems that an amendment of such statute extending its operation to foreign corporations does not affect the will of a testator who died before the amendment became operative.<sup>34</sup>

Under the construction given a statute of this type, however, it applies to testamentary gifts to foreign corporations,<sup>35</sup> even though the statute does not specifically mention foreign corporations,<sup>36</sup> as, for example, to a gift of personal property by a testator domiciled in the state in which the statute is enacted to a corporation of another state.<sup>37</sup> While the applicability of a statute of a state other than that of the testator's domicile has been recognized where the testator leaves real property situated in such other state,<sup>38</sup> according to some cases, a statute of a state other than that of the testator's domicile does not apply to bequests of personal property,<sup>39</sup> even where the bequest is to a corporation of such other state.<sup>40</sup>

By virtue of statutory provision, the validity of which has been upheld or recognized,<sup>41</sup> the statute of a state limiting the share of his estate which a testator leaving heirs may give to charitable or benevolent societies or corporations or for charitable uses applies to gifts of personal property which has a situs in the state, contained in a will of a testator domiciled in another state at the time of his death,<sup>42</sup> but such statutory provision has no application to personal property which may not be regarded as having a situs within the state.<sup>43</sup> The applicability of a statute limiting the amount of testamentary gifts, of the state in which the testator was domiciled at the time of his death, has been denied in respect of property which is being administered in the state of the testator's original domicile, by virtue of a statutory provision of the latter state.<sup>44</sup>

e. Corporations, Societies, Associations, and Institutions within Statute

Some of the statutes here considered apply to testamentary gifts to specified types of societies, associations, corporations, or institutions, but certain statutes do not apply to gifts to a state government, a state institution, or a municipality.

Some of the statutes here considered apply to testamentary gifts to specified types of societies, associations, corporations, or institutions, and whether or not a particular society, association, corporation, or institution comes within the operation of a particular statute depends on the terms of such statute.<sup>45</sup> Some statutes apparently apply only to gifts to corporations.<sup>46</sup> In general, in order to determine the status of a corporation and to ascertain the purposes for which it was incorporated, as affecting the applicability of the statutory restriction, recourse must be had or consideration given to

Infringing on right of a foreign state

The policy expressed in statute providing that devise to charity shall be valid only to extent of one half of estate, where testator has wife, child, descendant, or parent, applies to nonresident as well as resident testators, even though its effectuation may at times come perilously close to infringing on right of a foreign state to regulate manner of devolution of property having permanent situs within its confines, or belonging to one of its own citizens, in apparent violation of primary rules that disposition of realty is to be determined in accordance with laws of its situs, and of personality by those of domicile of owner

the statute by which it was incorporated or its charter and the statute under which it was framed,<sup>47</sup> its constitution and by-laws,<sup>48</sup> or what has been done or may be done thereunder<sup>49</sup> In the absence of any other evidence as to the character of a particular corporation, its character may be determined from its works<sup>50</sup>

The fact that a corporation was organized under a special act does not prevent its classification as a charitable corporation, under a statute of the type here considered applicable to gifts to charitable corporations, notwithstanding a constitutional provision forbidding incorporation by special act except for a purpose other than charitable and in cases where, in the judgment of the legislature, the objects of the corporation cannot be attained under general laws<sup>51</sup> The view has been taken that, where both "benevolent" and "charitable" organizations are designated by the statute, the terms are not synonymous,<sup>52</sup> but there is also authority for the view that there is no substantial difference between the two terms<sup>53</sup>

Statutory exceptions In order to claim the applicability of a provision of the statute excepting gifts to certain institutions from the operation of the statute of the type here considered, it must appear that the institution in question is within the exception<sup>54</sup> A statutory provision excepting bequests and devises to any state institution or municipality, or for the use or benefit of any state institution, exempts from the operation of the statute all absolute bequests and devises and all bequests and devises in trust for charitable uses where the beneficiary is a state institution,<sup>55</sup> a municipality,<sup>56</sup> or an institution exempt from the taxation<sup>57</sup> A county hospital is not, however, a "state institution,"<sup>58</sup> nor is a gift to such hospital for the purpose of a special ward a gift "for the use or benefit" of a state institution,<sup>59</sup> within the meaning of the exception, so as to take the gift out of the operation of the statutory restriction

Particular corporations, societies, associations, and institutions The view has been taken that a statute of the type here considered applicable to gifts to charitable or benevolent societies or corporations includes a gift to a bishop as a corporation sole,<sup>60</sup> and a gift to an institution organized for a political purpose<sup>61</sup> A statute applicable to testamentary gifts to corporations not for pecuniary profit has been held to include a corporation organized to conduct a hospital,<sup>62</sup> an orphanage,<sup>63</sup> and a home for aged persons,<sup>64</sup> but a bishop of a particular church is not necessarily a corporation within the meaning of such statute<sup>65</sup> notwithstanding he is for some purposes denominated a corporation sole<sup>66</sup> A statute imposing a restriction on devises or bequests to an educational institution<sup>67</sup> applies to a devise to a state university,<sup>68</sup> and a church is a "religious institution" within the mean-

Among other organizations which, it has been held or recognized, are subject to a statutory restriction of the type here considered on testamentary gifts to benevolent, charitable, literary, scientific, religious, or missionary societies, associations, or corporations,<sup>70</sup> are a corporation or association whose object or purpose is educational,<sup>71</sup> as, for example, a university,<sup>72</sup> a Young Men's Christian Association,<sup>73</sup> a board of commissioners for foreign missions,<sup>74</sup> a mutual benefit corporation or association,<sup>75</sup> and a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals.<sup>76</sup> There is, however, authority for the view that such statute does not apply to gifts to the United States government,<sup>77</sup> to a state government,<sup>78</sup> or to a municipal corporation.<sup>79</sup> A membership corporation is not a charitable corporation within the statute.<sup>80</sup>

f. Type or Form of Gift

- (1) In general
- (2) Gifts to individuals or to corporations not within statute and trusts in general
- (3) Gifts for particular purposes or uses or to particular persons

(1) In General

Gifts are not subject to the operation of the statute unless they come plainly within the terms thereof, the statute has been held applicable to gifts of contingent remainders

The question as to whether a particular gift is affected by the statutes here considered is determinable by the terms of the particular statute involved. There is authority for the view that a statute of this type cannot by judicial interpretation be made to include a gift which by fair construction is excluded,<sup>81</sup> and that, since the statute is a limitation on the right of a testator to dispose of his property, a gift is not subject to the operation of the statute unless the gift comes plainly within the terms of the statute.<sup>82</sup> Some of these statutes impose no limitation on gifts in general for charitable uses.<sup>83</sup> In general, a direct gift to a corporation, gifts to which are subject to the statutory limitation, is subject to the limitation<sup>84</sup> and a gift to an institution operated by such a corporation has been regarded as a gift to the corporation so as to bring the case within the operation of the limitation.<sup>85</sup>

Exercise of power of appointment. The view has been taken that a statute of this type does not apply to gifts to a charitable or benevolent institution, made in the exercise of a power of appointment conferred on the testator by the will of another,<sup>86</sup> or made in the exercise of a power of appointment over the remainder of a trust fund created by testator for the benefit of another by a deed of trust in which the power was reserved.<sup>87</sup>

only for the surviving wife or child with remainder over to an institution included in the statute <sup>88</sup>

Gift of remainder The applicability of the statute has been recognized, even though the gift otherwise subject to the statute is a contingent remainder<sup>89</sup> subject to being defeated by the birth of issue to the life tenant<sup>90</sup> The applicability of the statute has also been recognized even though the life tenant is authorized to consume the corpus,<sup>91</sup> where executors are given authority to use such portion of the corpus, in addition to income, as may be necessary for the support of the life beneficiary,<sup>92</sup> and where the will creates a trust to pay an annuity to the testator's wife who is the only surviving relative of those mentioned in the statutory limitation, and to pay to a corporation within the statutory limitation the balance of the income and to transfer all the property to such corporation on the death of the wife <sup>93</sup> Where, however, the gift of a remainder never became effective because the contingency on which it depended never happened, the view was taken that such gift may not be included in determining the amount of the gifts subject to the statutory limitation, as discussed infra subdivision h(3) (b) of this section

(2) Gifts to Individuals or to Corporations Not Within Statute and Trusts in General

In order to bring gifts to individuals within the operation of some statutes of the character under consideration, the gifts must be both in trust and for charitable uses

Some of the statutes here considered apply only to gifts to charitable or benevolent corporations, as considered supra, subdivision e of this section, or to gifts in trust for charitable uses<sup>94</sup> and, in order to bring gifts to individuals within the operation of such statutes, such gifts must be both in trust and for charitable uses<sup>95</sup> Where the statute is applicable to gifts to corporations and there is no reference to gifts in trust, the view has been taken that the statute does not apply to gifts to individuals in trust for charitable uses,<sup>96</sup> but a testamentary gift to a corporation which is subject to the statutory limitation, with directions that the corpus of the gift is to constitute a permanent endowment and the income is to be expended for the purposes of the corporation, is a direct bequest to the corporation and is not such a gift in trust as will relieve it from the operation of the statutory limitation<sup>97</sup> Under a statute applicable to testamentary gifts to certain types of institutions, a gift to trustees of such an institution has been regarded as a gift to the institution <sup>98</sup>

Devise or bequest to an ecclesiastical person A statute providing that no devise or trust for the benefit of any person and his successor or successors in any ecclesiastical office shall vest any estate or interest in such person or his successor, does not apply to a devise of real, personal, and mixed property to a bishop by name<sup>99</sup> Likewise, the mere fact that a gift is in trust to a person holding an ecclesiastical office is not enough to bring it within the statute <sup>1</sup>

Prior to an amendment of the New York statute, which added "purpose" after "society, association, or corporation,"<sup>2</sup> the statute which in terms applied to gifts to certain types of societies, associations, or corporations, in trust or otherwise, did not include a testamentary gift to individuals in trust for a charitable purpose<sup>3</sup> notwithstanding the will also authorized, but did not compel, the trustees to create a corporation <sup>4</sup> Where, however, the gift is to a trustee, either corporate<sup>5</sup> or individual,<sup>6</sup> in trust to pay the income to a specified society, association, or corporation, gifts to which are subject to the statute, such gift in trust comes within the operation of the statute. So also, the statute is applicable where designated trustees are required to turn over the subject of the trust to a corporation which is within the statute.<sup>7</sup> While a testator may not evade the statute by giving his property by will to individuals, in form absolutely but in fact subject to a secret trust for a purpose or organization within the statute,<sup>8</sup> the mere fact that the will shows that it is the desire of the testator that the property should be used for such a purpose is not sufficient to show the creation of a secret trust,<sup>9</sup> and where in such case evidence dehors the will does not show that there was a secret trust, the statute is not applicable.<sup>10</sup>

(3) Gifts for Particular Purposes or Uses or to Particular Persons

Gifts for charitable uses include the furtherance of religion or religious purposes and gifts for masses, and a gift for a charitable or benevolent purpose is applicable to a gift for the care, maintenance, and improvement of a cemetery.

There is authority for the view that, within the meaning of a statute of the type here considered applicable to gifts for "charitable uses," such uses include the furtherance of religion or religious purposes,<sup>11</sup> and missionary purposes,<sup>12</sup> and that a statute applicable to gifts for a "charitable" and "benevolent" purpose includes an "educational purpose."<sup>13</sup> So, also, a gift for the benefit of a teachers' welfare loan fund is within a statute applicable to a gift for a "charitable purpose,"<sup>14</sup> as is a gift for a scholarship.<sup>15</sup> Prior to the amendment of the New York statute, which added the word "purpose" after "society, association, or corporation," it was held that a gift to a bishop for the erection of a parochial school was not within the statutory provision applicable to certain types of societies, associations, or corporations.<sup>16</sup>

Gifts for care and embellishment of cemetery and cemetery lots The view has been taken that a statute applicable to a devise or bequest for a charitable or benevolent purpose is applicable to a gift for the care, maintenance, and improvement of a cemetery,<sup>17</sup> but the statute has been held not to apply to gifts for the care, maintenance, and the like of a particular burial or cemetery lot.<sup>18</sup>

Gifts for masses A particular gift for masses has been held not excessive and the testator has the right to dispose of the property for any legitimate purpose he sees fit.<sup>19</sup> Prior to an amendment of the New York statute, which added the word "purpose" after "society, association, or corporation," it was held that a gift to the pastor or priest of a specified Roman Catholic Church for masses for the repose of the soul of the testator and of members of his family was not within the statutory provision applicable to gifts to certain types of societies, associations, or corporations,<sup>20</sup> even where the will provided that the masses were to be said in such church,<sup>21</sup> subsequent to the above amendment, the cases are apparently not in accord as to the applicability of the statute to gifts for masses.<sup>22</sup>

In order to bring a testamentary gift to an individual within the application of the governing California statute, the gift must be both in trust and for a charitable use, and, therefore, the statute does not apply to a gift to an individual for masses where the elements of a trust are lacking.<sup>23</sup> It has been held, however, that a gift for masses is a gift for a charitable use within the meaning of such

g. Who May Question Gifts; Waiver and Estoppel

Under some statutes only those persons who are specified may question a testamentary gift on the ground that it is in excess of the permitted amount. The right to invoke the statute may be waived by failure to contest the validity of the gift.

Under some statutes only those persons who are

Purpose of statute

The purpose of the 1929 amendment to the Decedent Estate Law statute providing that the validity of a bequest for more than one half of testator's estate to charity may be contested only by a surviving husband, wife, child, descendant, or parent, was that only those whose survivorship furnishes the ground for an objection to the will shall have the right to object.

Assignments to testator's heir of another heir's interests in funds to which they might be entitled by reason of operation of statute was effective as against contention that right to invoke such statute is personal one and that only assignee can benefit by his invocation thereof, since its invocation by him as one of permitted class requires payment to testator's children of excess over statutory limit of such gifts under clause of will devising to them any portion of estate not effectually disposed of by will.

First cousin

Under statute prohibiting any person having husband, wife, child, or "descendant" or parent from bequeathing more than one half of her estate to charity, first cousin and sole distributee of testatrix had no right to object to the will which left more than half of testatrix' estate to charities.

N.Y.—In re Holyland's Will, 116 N.Y.S.2d 628

Natural father

Where father consented to adoption of two year old daughter by child's maternal grandparents, on death of child natural father had no proper standing under Decedent Estate Law to contest charitable be-statute,<sup>32</sup> and, where surviving children of a testator fail or refuse to claim the enforcement of the prohibition of a statutory provision that no person leaving a wife, child, or descendants of a child shall devise more than a certain fractional share of his estate to certain institutions to the exclusion of such wife or children, collateral heirs of the testator may not invoke such prohibition.<sup>33</sup>

The question as to who has the right to file objections to a will must be decided as of the time of the testator's death and not as of the time of filing objections.<sup>34</sup> A contest of the will begins when one authorized to contest the will first questions its validity and seeks to assert the statutory right.<sup>35</sup> Thus, such person acquires a property right as distributee at the time he commences the contest of the will by filing the objections,<sup>36</sup> and such right survives the contestant's death and can be pursued by his administrators,<sup>37</sup> notwithstanding no decree is submitted or signed before the contestant's death.<sup>38</sup> Where, however, a person entitled to object fails to do so during his lifetime, the right to file objection does not survive him and his executor or administrator has no right to contest the will.<sup>39</sup>

A special guardian, of a person entitled to question the validity of the gift but who is an absentee, has no authority to assert a purely personal right of the ward.<sup>40</sup> If a will is not contested the legal title is in charities, and the property will pass to them under the will.<sup>41</sup>

The right of a parent, husband, wife, child, or grandchild of the testator or the testatrix to waive a restriction of the type here considered by a writing executed at least six months prior to the death of the testator or the testatrix where the will was executed at least six months prior to the death of the testator or the testatrix has been granted by some statutory provision, the validity of which has been upheld.<sup>42</sup>

What constitutes waiver or estoppel The failure to assert the right to contest the validity of a gift creates a waiver,<sup>43</sup> and permits the beneficiary to take the whole estate.<sup>44</sup> Persons who are entitled to claim the benefit of the statute may waive or relinquish the right by the execution, for a consideration, of releases in respect of gifts subject to the statute,<sup>45</sup> and a husband may, by an antenuptial

Statute construed

(1) Amendment of section of Probate Code making a limitation as to degree of relationship of heirs who could invalidate testamentary gifts to charity does not operate to repeal other sections in same article relating to bequests or devises by will executed at least six months prior to death of testator leaving no spouse, child, grandchild, or parent

A testatrix' children signing at her request letters stating that if any portion of her estate, not effectually disposed of by her will, passed to them under provisions thereof, it would be given to named charitable institutions on same terms as testamentary gifts of her residuary personal estate to such institutions, made no effective waiver of their rights under statute prohibiting testamentary gifts to charity in excess of 50 per cent of testator's gross estate less debts

agreement, waive the benefit of a statute which specifies a husband as one of the survivors<sup>46</sup> The statutes in question, however, cannot be evaded by the device of a testator entering into an agreement with a prospective legatee that he would devote his legacy to the charitable purposes desired by the testator, or by charging the gift to one entitled to invoke the statute with the trust obligation to devote it to the charities<sup>47</sup>

There is authority for the view that a person who is entitled to claim the benefit of the statute may waive his right by accepting the benefit of a provision for him in the will and by not objecting to the excessive gift<sup>48</sup> According to some decisions, however, the fact that a person named in a statute of this type as one of the survivors receives payments or benefits in accordance with the terms of the will does not necessarily prevent such person's claiming the applicability of the statute,<sup>49</sup> or work an estoppel in this regard<sup>50</sup> So the fact that a person interested in the testator's estate stipulates, on the withdrawal, for a consideration, of his objections to the probate of the will, that he shall not question the validity of gifts in the will does not necessarily constitute a waiver of the right to invoke the limitation fixed by the statute<sup>51</sup>

Under a proviso in a statute of the type here considered that the statute shall not apply where certain specified heirs shall, by a writing executed a specified time prior to the testator's death, waive the statutory limitation, a mere consent to the provisions of a will written on the face thereof by one of the specified heirs, for whom provision is made by such will, does not constitute a general waiver of the rights and benefits secured to heirs by the statute,<sup>52</sup> and does not apply to a subsequent codicil making substantial changes in the disposition of the property involved<sup>53</sup>

The fact that the amount of testamentary gifts is in excess of the share permitted must be established by proof<sup>54</sup> The burden of proof is on the person who attacks the gifts because of the alleged excess<sup>55</sup> Whether or not such excess exists is usually a question of fact<sup>56</sup> A complaint in an action by one who seeks to establish that testamentary gifts subject to the statute exceed in amount the fractional share of the testator's estate which may be applied to such gifts, which fails to aver as a fact the existence of such excess, is bad,<sup>57</sup> an averment that the gifts are invalid because they exceed

(2) Determination of Amount of Estate and Disposable Amount

The whole property of the testator wherever situated, less the testator's debts, must be included in determining the disposable share to charities

The method of ascertaining the value of the estate and the amount which may be applied to gifts subject to a statute of the type here considered has been determined by a consideration of the terms of such statute in connection with other statutory provisions governing probate cases and the settlement of the estates of deceased persons<sup>59</sup> Accordingly, the total value of the distributable estate, a fractional share of which may be applied to gifts subject to the statute, is ascertained by taking the value of all the assets,<sup>60</sup> real and personal,<sup>61</sup> distributed, as of the date of distribution<sup>62</sup> Even in the absence of any specific provision for the deduction of debts, it is only the specified fractional share of the estate after the payment of debts,<sup>63</sup> charges of administration,<sup>64</sup> and the federal estate tax,<sup>65</sup> which may be distributed to the corporations or for the purposes subject to the statutory restriction

share of the testator's estate after the payment of debts, the debts are to be deducted<sup>66</sup> and the view has been expressed that the term "debts," as used in the statute, includes the costs of administration<sup>67</sup> but not legacies,<sup>68</sup> the "net estate," a share of which may be disposed of by devises or bequests subject to the statute, is determined by deducting the amount of such debts from the value of the gross assets of the estate<sup>69</sup>

Under the New York statute, in fixing the value of a testator's estate, one half of which may be given to organizations or for purposes subject to the statutory limitation, the general rule that the statute speaks as of the time of the death of the testator has been recognized or applied<sup>70</sup> The whole estate,<sup>71</sup> real and personal,<sup>72</sup> of the testator, wherever situated, must be included, and the value taken as of the date of his death,<sup>73</sup> that is, the whole estate must be treated as converted into money as of the date of the testator's death<sup>74</sup> Property which the testator owned at the time of his death, although not disposed of by the will, is included,<sup>75</sup> but property previously given in trust is not included<sup>76</sup> In general, the value of the widow's dower should be excluded from the valuation of the testator's estate as such dower constitutes no part of his estate,<sup>77</sup> but the rule is otherwise where dower has been released by the widow<sup>78</sup> The property set off to the surviving spouse,<sup>79</sup> or a minor

The statute prohibiting testator or testatrix having spouse, child, descendant or parent from leaving more than half his or her estate to benevolent, charitable, literary, scientific, religious or missionary society, association, corporation or purpose, and the statute governing election by surviving spouse against or in absence of testamentary provision, are correlative, and are neither exclusive nor contradictory of each other, and effect of election under latter statute is involved in and incidental to a determination of rights under former statute, thus, the making of a valid election against will under section 18 of the Decedent Estate child,<sup>80</sup> is not included in the valuation of the testator's estate. The amount of cash, however, which a surviving spouse withdraws from the estate pursuant to statutory provision conferring the right of election is to be considered as a benefit accruing to the spouse as of the date of the death of the deceased spouse and must be included in the total benefits payable by bequest or devise to the non-charitable beneficiaries.<sup>81</sup>

In view of the fact that the statute limits the disposable amount to organizations or for purposes within the statute to one half part of the estate after the payment of debts, the amount of the testator's debts must be deducted,<sup>82</sup> this requires the deduction of the amount of a bequest in payment of a debt due to the person to whom the bequest is made,<sup>83</sup> and of the amount of the federal income tax on income accrued prior to the testator's death.<sup>84</sup> Legacies for purposes not within the statute<sup>85</sup> and administration expenses<sup>86</sup> are not, however, deductible in determining the net estate. The net estate, of which one half may be given to organizations or for purposes within the statute, is determined by deducting the debts from the value of the gross assets of the estate,<sup>87</sup> and gifts subject to the statute may be given effect, if otherwise valid, to the extent

Situation of property Under some statutes of the type here considered, the whole estate of the testator, wherever situated,<sup>90</sup> must be considered and valued in determining the disposable portion to organizations or for purposes or uses subject to the statute, even though part of the property involved is located in a jurisdiction other than that in which the statute has been enacted.<sup>91</sup> If legal provisions for organizations or purposes subject to the statute, outside the state in which the statute has been enacted and is operative, amount to the permissible fractional share or more of the entire net estate, the property which has a situs within such state may not be given to the organizations or for the purposes to which the statute applies.<sup>92</sup> If such legal provisions outside the state amount to less than the permitted fractional share, as much of the property which has a situs within the state as is necessary to make up the permissible fractional share may be used.<sup>93</sup> In other words, where it is shown, that, in the administration of the estate in jurisdictions other than the state in which the statute has been enacted and is operative, heirs at law of the testator have received the share of the whole es-

Law effects a restriction on the term "last will and testament" in section 17 of such law, as if such term read "last will and testament as modified by a valid election made under section 18 of this act," and a valid election has the effect of a statutory codicil to the will.

tate to which they are entitled under the statute,<sup>94</sup> or that only a part of the estate subject to administration in such state is necessary to make up the share to which the heirs are entitled under the statute,<sup>95</sup> the heirs will not be permitted to take in such state more than is necessary to make up their share

(3) Amount of Gifts Subject to Statute

(b) Postponed gifts and gifts of remainders

(a) In General

The total of all the gifts to organizations or for purposes subject to statutory limitations must be taken in order to determine whether or not more than the disposable share has been bequeathed or devised. If a will provides for gifts in excess of the statutory share, the total must be reduced to the amount permitted

In general under the statutes here considered the total of all the gifts to organizations or for purposes subject to the statutory limitation must be taken in order to determine whether or not more than the disposable share has been bequeathed or devised,<sup>96</sup> in other words, no more may be given to two or more organizations than might have been given to one.<sup>97</sup> Where, however, a legatee or devisee renounces a gift which is subject to the statutory limitation, the amount or value of such gift is not to be included in determining the total amount of gifts subject to the limitation,<sup>98</sup> and a gift to a corporation which is not subject to the particular statutory limitation involved should not be included.<sup>99</sup> If the will provides for gifts in excess of the share permitted by the statute, the total must be reduced to the amount permitted.<sup>1</sup>

Under a statutory provision that certain gifts shall be valid to the extent of a specified fractional part of the estate of the testator and no more, certain absolute gifts of present interests or estates

have been held, on due computation, to constitute more in amount than such specified share and have been upheld to the extent of such share and no more.<sup>2</sup> A will which in terms directs that the residuary estate shall be divided into two equal parts and gives one of such parts to organizations or for purposes subject to the statutory limitation on such type of gifts to one-half part of the estate does not violate the statute where no other gift of that type is made.<sup>3</sup>

Excessive gifts as gifts for specific amount The view has been taken that the effect of a statutory limitation of the type here considered is to render the gift of the residuary estate of the testator, which is subject to the statute, and is therefore reduced, practically a bequest of a specific sum.<sup>4</sup> Thus, by virtue of such a statute, where a gift of the residuary estate is made to organizations or for purposes subject to the statutory limitations, in excess of the statutory share, a gift otherwise uncertain in amount is transformed into a general legacy for a fixed sum,<sup>5</sup> that is, the statutory share of the net estate,<sup>6</sup> and the "excess" in effect constitutes the residuary estate.<sup>7</sup>

Procedure Computation of the value of gifts to organizations or for purposes subject to the statute, before final determination of debts of the estate, would be premature, and should be postponed until claims are adjudicated.<sup>8</sup> Where the method of computing the total of gifts subject to the statutory limitation is based on a mistake of fact, the surrogate may disregard such computation and make a new computation.<sup>9</sup>

(b) Postponed Gifts and Gifts of Remainders

The validity of the gift of a remainder, subject to the statutory limitations, is determinable as of the death of the testator and not as of the date of the death of the life tenant. If it is uncertain that the gift of a remainder will become effective, the determination of its value should be postponed until the termination of the preceding trust

In some jurisdictions the view has been expressed that the mere fact that a gift of a remainder may in future be ascertained to be excessive under the statute is not sufficient to warrant a present conclusion that it is excessive,<sup>10</sup> and it has been held, where a gift in remainder, subject to the statutory limitation, is subject to various contingencies so that it is uncertain whether or not the gift will become effective, that the determination of the value of such gift should be postponed until after the termination of the preceding trust<sup>11</sup> In other jurisdictions various gifts in remainder to institutions, subject to the statute, after a life estate to a wife or child of the testator, have been regarded as gifts of more than one third of the testator's estate, to the exclusion of his wife or child, within the statutory prohibition,<sup>12</sup> but the statute is not necessarily violated where a remainder is given to such an institution<sup>13</sup>

The validity of the gift of a remainder subject to the New York statute, after a life estate or interest, not subject to the statute, is determinable

as of the date of the death of the testator and not as of the date of the death of the life tenant,<sup>14</sup> the value of the remainder, as of the date of the death of the testator, must be determined and taken as fixing the value of the gift,<sup>15</sup> and the value of the life estate or interest must not be included in the computation of the charitable gifts<sup>16</sup> In such case the value of the life estate or interest is to be computed as of the date of the testator's death,<sup>17</sup> and the difference between the value of the trust fund or fund subject to the life estate or interest, as of the date of the testator's death, and the value of the life estate or interest, as of that date, is the value of the remainder as of that date<sup>18</sup>

The foregoing rules providing for computation as of the date of the death of the testator were not changed by the amendment of the governing New York statute, which provides in substance that, when payment of a devise or bequest to an organization or for a purpose, subject to the statute, is postponed, in computing the one-half part of such organization or purpose no allowance shall be made for such postponement or for any interest or gains which may accrue after the testator's death,<sup>19</sup> and the statute as so amended permits a present determination of the value of a contingent remainder<sup>20</sup> Where a remainder exceeds the statutory share at the termination of the life estate, the charity is entitled to the trust assets in the proportion that the maximum permissible gift bears to the present value of the whole remainder, and the statutory distributees receive the trust assets in the proportion that the excess bears to the present value of the whole remainder<sup>21</sup>

In ascertaining the value of the life estate it is proper<sup>22</sup> and sometimes necessary<sup>23</sup> to make use of annuity or mortality tables based on the probability or expectancy of life, and this rule is applicable since the above amendment of the New York statute<sup>24</sup> The propriety of using such other means than the mortality or annuity tables, as may be necessary to ascertain the value of the life estate, has apparently been recognized<sup>25</sup> In some cases governed by the statute prior to the above amendment, the actual period of life after the death of the testator was used as a basis for the computation where the life tenant had died before the date of computation,<sup>26</sup> and the view was taken that in such case the actual value of the life estate or interest,<sup>27</sup> or a valuation based on the actual duration of such estate or interest,<sup>28</sup> should govern rather than a valuation based on annuity tables or expectancy In other cases, however, the propriety of the use of annuity tables was recognized even where the life estate or interest had terminated,<sup>29</sup> and was regarded as the proper and fairer method of computation where there were several life estates or interests, some of which had, and some had not, terminated<sup>30</sup> Where, after a computation in the manner herein indicated, it appears that the value of gifts subject to the statute is in excess of the share permitted by the statute, such gifts may be given effect only to the extent so permitted<sup>31</sup> and, if no excess is shown, such gifts may be given full effect if otherwise valid<sup>32</sup>

Acceleration of remainder It seems that the acceleration of a remainder subject to the statute, by the fact that preceding trusts are void, may so increase the value of the remainder as to bring the case within the statutory limitation<sup>33</sup>

Remainder which never vests Where the gift of a remainder to an organization subject to the statutory limitations never became effective because the contingency on which it depended never happened, the gift may not be included in determining the amount of the gifts subject to the limitation<sup>34</sup>

i. Interest, Increase, and Losses

charitable purpose and thereby render it practically a bequest for a specified sum, the bequest bears interest from the time when it becomes due under the provision of the code applicable to interest on legacies<sup>35</sup>

Prior to an amendment to the governing New York statute, which amendment provides in substance that when payment of a devise or bequest to an organization or for a purpose, subject to the statute, is postponed, in computing the one half part of such organization or purpose no allowance shall be made for such postponement or for any interest or gains which may accrue after the testator's death,<sup>36</sup> in the case of the gift of a remainder subject to the statute, it was held that the gift carried interest from the date of the testator's death until the death of the life tenant,<sup>37</sup> payable from the portion of the estate passing as on intestacy<sup>38</sup> The purpose of the amendment was to supersede these rulings<sup>39</sup>

According to some cases, a legacy subject to the New York statutory restriction bears interest on the amount payable from the date the legacy is payable for the period during which payment is deferred,<sup>40</sup> payable out of the portion of the estate which passes as on intestacy<sup>41</sup> On the theory that a gift of the residuary estate to organizations or for purposes subject to the statute in excess of the statutory limitation is converted by the statute into a general legacy for a specified amount, it was held that, since, under the statute then applicable, such legacy was payable one year after the grant of letters testamentary, interest did not commence to run until after the expiration of one year,<sup>42</sup> and the beneficiary of such legacy was not entitled to income earned on the subject matter of such legacy during such year<sup>43</sup> The view was taken, however, that, where such gift was a gift of a remainder and the life estate or interest had fallen in because the life tenant died a few days after the testator,<sup>44</sup> or because the life tenant, who was the widow of the testator, rejected the provisions made for her in the will,<sup>45</sup> the gift bore interest from one year after the grant of letters testamentary Even prior to the above amendment, the beneficiary of a gift of a remainder subject to the statute was not entitled to share in any increase in the value of the estate after the death of the testator during the period of the life tenancy,<sup>46</sup> and this rule is recognized by the amendment<sup>47</sup> In such case, to the share of the net estate which is not applicable to gifts subject to the statutory limitation, all profits must be credited<sup>48</sup> and all losses charged<sup>49</sup> The right to any increase has apparently been denied even where the life estate has fallen in<sup>50</sup>

While there is authority for the view that, in the case of present gifts in excess of the statutory limitation, the beneficiaries of such gifts are not entitled to any increase or income accruing after the death of the testator,<sup>51</sup> there is apparently authority for the view that, in the case of present gifts of a portion of the residuary estate, in excess of the statutory limitations, the beneficiaries of such gifts are entitled to one half of the increase in value of property of which they are entitled to receive a one half share<sup>52</sup> In the case of present gifts, subject to the statutory limitation, of one half part of the net estate, there is no violation of the statute, and the beneficiaries of such gifts are entitled to an increase in the value of the share given to them occurring after the death of the testator or testatrix<sup>53</sup> The right of the charitable corporation to the income on the portion of the estate to which it is entitled, represented by the gift of a remainder

j. Charges to Share of Estate Not Applicable to Gifts within Statute

Once the net estate has been ascertained, all expenses of administration, funeral expenses, legacies not subject to the statutory limitation, all commissions, the federal estate tax, and such other charges as are usually paid out of a residuary estate, are to be paid from the part of the estate not subject to the statutory limitation

In New York, after the net estate of which one half may be applied to gifts subject to the statutory limitation, has been ascertained, as set forth above in subdivision h (2) of this section, from the other part of the estate not applicable to such gifts are to be paid all expenses of administration,<sup>55</sup> funeral expenses,<sup>56</sup> legacies not subject to the statutory limitation,<sup>57</sup> other payments which the will directs,<sup>58</sup> all commissions,<sup>59</sup> the federal estate tax,<sup>60</sup> and such other charges as are usually payable out of a residuary estate <sup>61</sup>

k. Payment of Gifts within Statute, Adjustment among Such Gifts, and Vesting of Title

Where the total gifts subject to the statutory limitations are in excess of the share permitted by the statute, a preferred gift will be given effect by paying such gift without abatement from the share of the estate applicable to the payment of gifts within the statute, and the non-preferred gifts will be abated.

Where gifts in excess of the statutory limitation are immediately payable in part, such funds as are applicable to the payment of such gifts should then be applied thereto <sup>62</sup> Where the total gifts subject to the statutory limitation are in excess of the share permitted by the statute, a provision of the will giving preference to certain of such gifts will ordinarily be given effect<sup>63</sup> by paying the preferred gifts without abatement<sup>64</sup> from the share of the estate applicable to the payment of gifts within the statute, and the nonpreferred gifts will be abated <sup>65</sup> So, the court has directed the payment from the amount available for the payment of legacies of specific amounts in preference to the payment of gifts of the residuary estate, which are also subject to the statute <sup>66</sup> As between legacies of specific amounts preference has been given to a gift to a cemetery corporation for the care of a burial plot <sup>67</sup> In respect of gifts as to which there is no preference, the amount applicable to them will ordinarily be prorated <sup>68</sup>

Where the statute permits the gift of one-half part of the estate to two organizations subject to the statutory limitation, which were to share in the residuary estate, the view was taken in an early case that if the amount payable to one of such organizations did not exceed one fourth of the estate the necessary deduction should be made from the share of the other organization,<sup>69</sup> and that if one of two organizations, gifts to which were subject to the statutory limitation, was, because of restricted corporate power, unable to take its full share of the limited amount, the other organization could take

1. Devolution of Property Not Available for Gifts Subject to Statute

excess, if not otherwise disposed of by the will, usually passes as intestate property

Where gifts subject to the statute are in excess of the fractional share of the estate which is applicable to such gifts, the excess, if not otherwise disposed of by the will, usually passes as intestate property,<sup>73</sup> either to the heirs<sup>74</sup> or next of kin<sup>75</sup> of the testator, according to the nature of the property and the statute governing descent and distribution. If, however, the will contains a provision disposing of such excess,<sup>76</sup> as, for example, an effective residuary clause,<sup>77</sup> the excess will pass pursuant to such provision. Accordingly, where a testator left none of the relatives listed in the statute, the gift of the residue to an institution is not limited to the statutory share<sup>78</sup>

Determination of fairness

(1) The fairness of a contract to execute a will is usually to be determined as of its date, and the happening of subsequent events within a reasonable contemplation of the parties does not afford a defense Ga.—First Nat Bank & Trust Co v Falligant, 67 SE 2d 473, 208 Ga 479—Mann v Moseley, 67 S E 2d 128, 208 Ga 420

Obligatory force

If whole arrangement between two persons is fulfilled by mere making of will and nothing legally binding on him who signs the instrument to let it remain unrevoked is contemplated, obligatory force of a contract is not intended and one who makes will remains at liberty to change his mind and his will N J.—Minogue v Lipman, 96 A 2d 426, 25 N J Super 376

If deceased's written instrument, wherein he agreed that his wife and son should share equally in his estate, was merely a resolution, judgment dividing estate accordingly was erroneous, since resolutions cannot be enforced

ment thereto, as discussed infra § 112, certainty and definiteness in its terms<sup>87</sup> and in the designation of the promisee or beneficiary,<sup>88</sup> and provided the contract is not within the statute of frauds, as discussed in Frauds, Statute of, § 56, and is free from fraud, or undue influence in procuring it.<sup>89</sup> A contract to make a will means an effectual will, disposing of property on death, and implies a promise that the promisor will, on his death, leave a will which has not been revoked.<sup>90</sup>

b. Form

Unless otherwise prescribed by statute, no formal contract is necessary to bind one in the disposition of his property on his death, and, except as required by statute, such contracts may be valid and enforceable even though oral.

If not prescribed by statute, a formal contract is not necessary to bind one in the disposition of his property on his death.<sup>91</sup> Although usually put in the form of an agreement to bequeath by will, that is not essential, it being sufficient that there is an agreement to leave the property or that the promisee shall have it at the death of the promisor,<sup>92</sup> the fact that the mode whereby the disposition is to be effected is not specified does not impair the validity of the agreement,<sup>93</sup> nor does the fact that the promisor is given his option to transfer by will or conveyance.<sup>94</sup> An instrument in the form of a will may of itself be a contract to leave the testator's property in the manner therein provided,<sup>95</sup> at any rate if delivered to the promisee.<sup>96</sup> The agreement need not be executed in the form required in the execution of testamentary instruments,<sup>97</sup> and it is not essential that the instrument expressing the promise contain any statement or recital of the consideration.<sup>98</sup> The invalidity of the agreement as a will does not prevent enforcement of its contractual provisions.<sup>99</sup>

c. Nature

Contracts for testamentary disposition have been held covenants to stand seized to the use of the promisee, with use and power of disposition except by will continuing in the promisor for life.

A contract to make a particular disposition of one's property by will has been said to be in nature and legal effect a covenant to stand seized to the use of the promisee, with use and power of disposition except by will continuing in the promisor for life.<sup>8</sup> One who offers to enter into a contract to make a will has the right to designate the offer as either unilateral or bilateral,<sup>9</sup> and whether the offer is unilateral or bilateral depends on the offeror's intent and the facts and circumstances of the particular case.<sup>10</sup> A contract to make a specific bequest, even when a will to that effect has been duly made and executed, is negative in character.<sup>11</sup> Such an agreement is not a sale,<sup>12</sup> and has been held to create or vest no legal or equitable estate, in present, in the beneficiary,<sup>13</sup> but is at most an

Mutual assent is an essential element to a contract for testamentary or similar disposition of property.

As in the case of contracts generally, mutual as-

A mere offer, unaccepted, makes no binding contract,<sup>31</sup> there must be an acceptance<sup>32</sup> which must be on the terms of the offer in order to be binding on both parties.<sup>33</sup> Acceptance may consist not alone of a promise, but when contemplated by the offer, of the performance of acts of the kind which the offer calls for,<sup>34</sup> and no formal statement of acceptance, written or verbal, is necessary<sup>35</sup> It is no objection to the enforcement of such a contract that it has been entered into with a third party for the promisee's benefit, if the latter has acted under

§ 113(1). — Consideration

Contracts for testamentary or similar disposition of property must, like other contracts, be supported by a sufficient valid consideration

In accordance with the rule applicable to contracts generally, a contract to make a will must be supported by a sufficient valid consideration,<sup>37</sup> except, possibly, where it is a contract under seal<sup>38</sup> The law permits a wide latitude in determining what shall constitute sufficient consideration for a contract to devise<sup>39</sup> A sufficient consideration may consist of a benefit to the promisor,<sup>40</sup> or a detriment to the promisee,<sup>41</sup> or both,<sup>42</sup> but it must fall within at least one of these classes<sup>43</sup> It must have some

value in the eyes of the law,<sup>44</sup> but in the absence of fraud or overreaching, the promisor, if competent, can fix on anything not in itself unlawful as a consideration and put his own value on it,<sup>45</sup> and whether it is equivalent to the promise to leave the property in that respect is for the determination of the parties at the time they make the bargain.<sup>46</sup> A motive, even though expressed in the promise, is not consideration either legal or equitable and will not sustain the contract.<sup>47</sup> A promise may constitute a sufficient consideration.<sup>48</sup> While there must be mutuality of obligation,<sup>49</sup> a consideration exists sufficient to support the contract although it consists of acts to be performed by the offeree if such acts have been fully performed by the promisee.<sup>50</sup>

The conferring of a benefit to which the promisor is already lawfully entitled,<sup>51</sup> or the doing of that which it is the promisee's legal duty to do,<sup>52</sup> does not constitute consideration, but the doing of acts which there is only a moral or social obligation to perform is sufficient for this purpose.<sup>53</sup> A benefit to the promisor, if it forms no part of the inducement for the promise and is given without any reference thereto, and not as part of any bargain, cannot be made to serve as consideration.<sup>54</sup> In jurisdictions refusing to permit third persons to assert contracts made for their benefit, a contract based thereon may not be enforced by such persons, and it is essential that a consideration of some nature shall have proceeded from the beneficiary in order to render the contract available.<sup>55</sup> Elsewhere the consideration may be sufficient to support the contract although it comes from persons other than the promisee asserting his rights under it,<sup>56</sup> or although the benefits under it flow not to the promisor, but to some third person designated by him.<sup>57</sup> Even though no new or different consideration is given, a continuing consideration is sufficient to support a new promise or ratification where the contract was unenforceable, on other grounds, as originally made.<sup>58</sup>

In the notes below will be found cases of contracts for testamentary or similar disposition of property in which the consideration has been held sufficient,<sup>59</sup> or in which the consideration has been held insufficient <sup>60</sup>

Past consideration Under some circumstances, a past consideration may support, or aid in supporting, the contract,<sup>61</sup> but the past consideration, in order so to operate, must give rise to an equitable obligation, and a previous moral obligation, unconnected with a prior legal or equitable consideration, is not sufficient <sup>62</sup>

§ 113(2). — Evidence as to Existence and Terms of Contract

The burden is on the plaintiff to establish the existence and terms of a contract for testamentary or similar disposition of property, and the contract and its terms must be established by evidence that is clear and convincing

Generally, in actions relating to contracts for testamentary or similar disposition of property, the burden is on plaintiff to show the existence and

terms of the contract,<sup>63</sup> and where the agreement is in writing, the execution of the contract<sup>64</sup> Where a confidential relationship exists, an alleged oral agreement to bequeath property will be presumed to have been obtained by undue influence <sup>65</sup>

The existence and terms of the contract may be shown by any competent evidence which is relevant and material <sup>66</sup> The proved integrity of the deceased is a fact which the court will consider <sup>67</sup> Evidence is admissible of the facts and circumstances,<sup>68</sup> such as the relations of the parties,<sup>69</sup> and their business habits<sup>70</sup> Parol evidence of the existence of an oral contract to make a will is inadmissible to vary the terms of a formal written contract which does not mention a will.<sup>71</sup>

Courts accept with caution and examine with scrutiny evidence offered in support of a contract to make a disposition of property of a deceased person different from that provided by law.<sup>72</sup> The

by direct evidence<sup>98</sup> The agreement may be shown by corroborating testimony,<sup>99</sup> and all the circumstances may be considered,<sup>1</sup> including performance,<sup>2</sup> as well as the governing law<sup>3</sup>

Although such expressions may be considered with other circumstances in determining whether a contract has been made,<sup>4</sup> mere expressions of donative intent are insufficient to establish the existence of a contract,<sup>5</sup> and it is not sufficient to show merely that the statements and conduct of the deceased raised the hopes and expectations of complainant<sup>6</sup> The implication that a contract was made may have reinforcement from evidence of the conduct of the parties at the time of making the agreement and subsequent thereto<sup>7</sup> Statements or conduct of the promisee inconsistent with his claim of a contract will be given due weight in the determination of whether there was such a contract<sup>8</sup> The contract may be proved by declarations and conduct of the parties not in the presence of each other,<sup>9</sup> it may also be shown by competent witnesses who testify to admissions of the deceased party to the agreement,<sup>10</sup> or an express promise may be shown<sup>11</sup>

dence tending to show the existence of a contract, the proof of the execution of a will in favor of the promisee is corroborative proof of the contract, even though the will is invalid,<sup>13</sup> and even where the will is subsequently revoked, it is considered by the court as evidence in support of the agreement,<sup>14</sup> but the subsequent execution of another will, not in conformity with the alleged contract, is strong evidence of the absence of such an agreement<sup>15</sup> The contract may be established by the parol evidence of witnesses who were not present at the making of the contract<sup>16</sup> Impressions made on a witness,<sup>17</sup> or what he understood from a conversation,<sup>18</sup> are not competent to establish a contract to make a will.

The testimony of a witness is to be viewed in the light of his interest, his expectations, his conclusions, and the condition of his memory as disclosed by the record,<sup>19</sup> and witnesses offered for the purpose of proving the contract may speak their own language if, with its background and context, their thought and meaning are clear and the contract is adequately and definitely proved on the whole record<sup>20</sup> The mere relationship of mother and son does not tend to prove the existence of a parol contract to devise<sup>21</sup>

Contracts to make a will or other similar disposition of property are subject to the same rules of construction as other contracts generally,<sup>24</sup> and, to some extent, to those which govern the construction of wills<sup>25</sup> The law does not view the renunciation of the right to revoke a will as a casual matter<sup>26</sup>

A construction will be given which will effectuate the real intent of the parties, as expressed,<sup>27</sup> in the instrument as a whole,<sup>28</sup> and as it was made at the time the agreement was made,<sup>29</sup> in the light of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the contract<sup>30</sup> Some meaning shall, if possible, be given to every part of it<sup>31</sup> Where the contract is contained in a series of letters, all the letters are to be considered and construed together<sup>32</sup> That meaning and effect are to be given the language which the parties manifestly intended it should have;<sup>33</sup> it is to be applied according to its common use or meaning,<sup>34</sup> even though it is expressed in terms having a technical, legal meaning if it is plain from the manner and circumstances in which they are used that the parties used the terms according to their popular, and not their legal signifi-

The meaning which the parties themselves by their conduct attach to the contract is an acceptable guide to its interpretation,<sup>36</sup> but that circumstance is not in all cases conclusive as to the rights of beneficiaries under the agreement<sup>37</sup> A construction totally depriving the contract of all force and effect and rendering it a nullity will not be favored<sup>38</sup> Such contracts will be construed as having been made in view of, and with the intention that they shall operate according to, the existing laws with respect to transfers by will<sup>39</sup> In addition to the examples and instances already set out in this section in connection with particular principles of construction, there are a number of other cases in which provisions of particular contracts of this character have been judicially construed<sup>40</sup>

The promise of a decedent to make a third person decedent's heir is the equivalent of a promise to devise all of decedent's descendible estate to the third person; and where for a legal consideration one promises to make another his heir, it is always regarded not as promising the impossible of establishing the tie of blood, that which makes one the "heir" of another, but as the equivalent of promising that he shall receive a child's inheritable part of the promisor's estate

§ 115 What Law Governs

The general rules applicable to contracts determine what law governs contracts for testamentary or similar disposition of property

Although a contract to make a will, or the like, if valid where made, is valid everywhere,<sup>41</sup> it is not necessarily enforceable everywhere, and to be enforceable should not be opposed to the policy of the jurisdiction of the testator's final domicile.<sup>42</sup> As far as the enforceability of the agreement depends on matters going to the remedy, the lex fori, rather than the lex loci contractus, governs.<sup>43</sup> With respect to construction, such a contract is governed by the law of the place where it is executed,<sup>44</sup> relating to damages, by the law of the place where it is to be performed.<sup>45</sup>

A contract whereby devisees of realty conveyed to them by their mother agreed that they would execute will leaving the realty to the survivor for life and thereafter to descendants of their father, related back to the deed transactions three years before and became effective between the parties as of the date the deeds were executed and delivered, where the contract was merely evidence of a preexisting oral agreement made at date of execution of the deeds

a. By Promisor

(1) What constitutes

(2) Time for performance, when breach occurs

(1) What Constitutes

Generally, a substantial compliance with the terms of the contract is sufficient performance, a literal compliance not being required

A valid and enforceable agreement by one party to devise or bequeath certain property to another party calls for performance according to its terms,<sup>46</sup> and in determining whether a will constitutes performance, the contract and the will are to be considered together.<sup>47</sup> A failure to transfer by deed or will the property agreed to be bestowed on the promisee is a breach of the contract.<sup>48</sup> It is not material in what manner the failure to carry out the undertaking is produced<sup>49</sup> or whether it arises by

An agreement to give named party stated monthly allowance during her life and, if she fulfilled her part of agreement and remained faithful to her duties as friend of promisor, not to revoke latter's will as to property left to promisee, was separable, not entire, contract

design or accident<sup>50</sup> The promisee's rights arising from a breach have been said to exist where he has performed his part of the contract and the promisor dies without leaving a valid will in accordance with the contract,<sup>51</sup> either where he dies without making a will,<sup>52</sup> or leaving a will in which there is no provision which can be construed as a compliance with the agreement,<sup>53</sup> or one which by its terms complies with the contract but which is for some reason invalid,<sup>54</sup> unless the promise has been performed during his life,<sup>55</sup> or unless performance is prevented under such circumstances as to excuse its failure<sup>56</sup> Generally, however, a substantial compliance with the contract is all that is necessary for the performance, literal compliance not being required,<sup>57</sup> and there is no breach when the promise to bequeath or devise was general and the provision made is ample, even though the arrangement made by the will is not in all particulars and details the same as that stipulated by the contract if it is equal to, or greater than, the contract provision in substance,<sup>58</sup> or when the provision made satisfies and substantially conforms to the description of the provision that the testator promised to make<sup>59</sup> Where the contract contemplates that the provision in favor of the promisee may be a conditional or limited one, the promisor's exercise of his reserved power by leaving the property subject to the conditions or limitations permitted under the contract is no breach of the agreement,<sup>60</sup> similarly, where, by its terms, the promisor's obligation is to continue only until the happening of some specified contingency, after the contingency occurs the promisor may make an inconsistent disposition thereof without any breach of contract resulting,<sup>61</sup> although he may not do so where the contingency never occurs<sup>62</sup> The fact that prior to entering into a new and different contract the promisor states that he will do what he was already bound to do, does not relieve the promisor of the obligation to perform his part of the previous contract<sup>63</sup>

Act of executing will as performance and discharge The basis of the rights of the parties to the contract is found in the terms of the contract itself even though a will conforming to it is made<sup>64</sup> The mere drawing and execution of such a will is not of itself a performance and discharge of the contractual obligation<sup>65</sup> The rights of the parties under the contract are not varied by the mere fact of execution or nonexecution of the will<sup>66</sup>

Independent gifts not referable to contract Transfers of property to the promisee by the promisor in his lifetime, resting on some independent basis of right or favor, and not referable to the contract, do not show performance,<sup>67</sup> neither does a testamentary provision for the promisee, unless made under such circumstances as to show that it was intended as a satisfaction of the debt,<sup>68</sup> even though it is the same in amount as what was promised<sup>69</sup>

(2) Time for Performance, When Breach Occurs

Generally, the contract cannot be completely performed until the death of the promisor, but it may be breached during his lifetime by his repudiation of it

Where the contract promises only a particular disposition of property, without specifying the mode in which it is to be made, the promisor can perform

by any means which will effectuate the proposed disposition, whether by will or conveyance,<sup>70</sup> or even, when the agreement is to arrange matters so that a child of the promisor will receive a full child's share, by dying intestate,<sup>71</sup> but in so far as the agreement is left unexecuted by conveyance, or where it specifically contemplates a post mortem provision, the contract is one which necessarily cannot be completely performed until the death of the promisor,<sup>72</sup> and which, for that purpose, can take effect only on that event,<sup>73</sup> and hence it has been said that no breach of the agreement can occur or be assumed as long as the promisor lives.<sup>74</sup> Even so, however, the breach, when it does occur, is one committed by deceased and the liability because thereof is his.<sup>75</sup> This rule that there is no breach in the testator's lifetime is subject, it has been held, to the qualification that when the promisor in his lifetime explicitly and unequivocally disavows and repudiates the disagreement and refuses to carry it out,<sup>76</sup> or puts it out of his power to perform, as by a conveyance to third persons during his life,<sup>77</sup> such conduct may be treated as an immediate breach, previous to his death, but, in order for a repudiation to constitute a breach, notice thereof must be brought home to the promisee.<sup>78</sup> He may, moreover, by his conduct waive such anticipatory breach,<sup>79</sup> it not being imperative on him to regard a lifetime conveyance as a breach where it does not incapacitate the promisor from performing, but leaves him still capable of doing so at his death.<sup>80</sup> Where the promisor, at his death, does not leave the property according to his agreement, an immediate breach exists at that time without postponement by reason of the fact that a disposition on condition is made which may result in the promisee's receiving all that was promised by satisfaction of the condition which is possible then or thereafter.<sup>81</sup>

b. By Promisee

- (1) Necessity
- (2) Sufficiency

(1) Necessity

The promisee, in order to claim under the contract, must have performed the obligations imposed on him by it

Performance by the promisee of the obligations imposed on him by the contract is essential in order that he may claim by virtue of it,<sup>82</sup> and, where he never enters on the performance of the obligations on which the promise was conditioned,<sup>83</sup> or where, after partial performance, he fails or refuses to continue to perform, such refusal or failure not being compelled or provoked by the promisor,<sup>84</sup> he cannot have the provisions of the promise enforced, unless explanatory circumstances excusing his failure or default exist,<sup>85</sup> as, for instance, where the promisor is the one primarily at fault, his conduct being the provoking cause of the promisee's failure of performance.<sup>86</sup>

Condonation of breach; waiver of performance However, a breach by the promisee may be condoned by the testator,<sup>87</sup> or he may waive or abandon further performance by the promisee of the obligations which the latter has undertaken,<sup>88</sup> indeed, it has been held that whenever there is adequate ground for rescission by reason of the promisee's breach of his obligations, the testator's failure to give notice of rescission is a waiver of the non-performance which ceases by reason of the waiver, to be available in impairment of the binding force of the promise<sup>89</sup>

(2) Sufficiency

Conduct of the promisee which in fact and substance fulfills his obligations under the contract is sufficient

Conduct of the promisee which does in fact and substance fulfill the obligations undertaken by him as the consideration for the promise suffices,<sup>90</sup> no other conduct does<sup>91</sup> However, performance, even of material stipulations, need not always be completed during the life of the promisor and may be perfected afterward in some instances,<sup>92</sup> where the time for performance continues open at that time and there has been no breach by the promisee<sup>93</sup> Under a parol contract, strict performance is required of the promisee,<sup>94</sup> and where it requires rendition of services, such rendition must be wholly referable to the contract and solely predicated thereon, and done with a view to its complete performance<sup>95</sup>

Fact that mother pursuant to contract to devise land to son on his agreement to support her lived with son for eight years and then voluntarily left without cause and remained until her death twelve years thereafter with her daughter, and that mother and son executed lease covering land involved and other land, did not amount to rescission of contract, notwithstanding son made no claim until probate of subsequent will, where there was nothing to indicate that contract was considered

terest under the contract<sup>99</sup> The abandonment of a contract may be effected by acts of one of the parties thereto, which are inconsistent with its existence and acquiesced in by the other party<sup>1</sup> The rescission of such an agreement is usually a question of fact<sup>2</sup> and the making of a later contract between the same parties on different terms and making no reference to the contract for a will has been held not necessarily conclusive of a rescission<sup>3</sup> Where a new contract is consistent with the continuance of the former one and only provides a new method of discharging the contract, it has no effect as a rescission unless or until it is performed<sup>4</sup>

Acceptance of anticipatory breach. Where, in his lifetime, the promisor breaks the contract and the promisee elects to accept and sue on the anticipatory breach, the operation of the contract, except as an aid in the ascertainment of damages, is at an end,<sup>5</sup> but there is no obligation imposed on the promisee to accept the repudiation and he may if he chooses, treat the contract as continuing until the promisor's death produces a breach<sup>6</sup>

erty, the promisor cannot repudiate the contract after such person performs the condition.<sup>8</sup> Where the contingency never occurs, the promise remains binding in the same manner and to the same extent as if it had been absolute<sup>9</sup> Although the contract contains such a provision, the parties may by assent waive it so as to permit the occurrence of the contingency specified as that on which a forfeiture is to occur and still retain the contract in force unimpaired<sup>10</sup>

b. Rescission by One Party

A contract for testamentary or similar disposition of property is generally irrevocable by one of the parties thereto.

A writing which does not amount to a contract because no obligations are assumed by either party may be revoked<sup>11</sup> An agreement to leave or to make a particular disposition of property cannot be rescinded by the promisor after performance on the part of the promisee<sup>12</sup> without the promisee's consent thereto<sup>13</sup> This would be an intolerable fraud which a court of equity will not permit<sup>14</sup> So, too, not only can the contract not be revoked but, where the contract itself is expressed in the form of a will,<sup>15</sup> or where a will is made pursuant to the contract,<sup>16</sup> the testator cannot, by the act of revoking the will, escape the obligations of his contract nor can his heirs or substituted legatees take any benefit by such revocation, and an attempted revocation, if deliberately made, constitutes a fraud on the promisee<sup>17</sup>

Agreement to deed property

In an action to enforce a contract to will real estate where it was insisted that the contract had been abandoned by another letter wherein deceased agreed to deed the property, but where the evidence showed that this was simply an intention of carrying out the former contract, the new proposal would not discharge the old contract since the new one was never carried into effect

The will itself may be revoked or changed as a will<sup>18</sup> even where the contract is that the testator will not revoke,<sup>19</sup> and, thus, a revocation which affects the rights of third persons not parties to the contract but does not affect the rights of the promisee or alter the provision which, pursuant to agreement, the testator has made for him,<sup>20</sup> or which, in so far as it alters such provision, increases the share of the promisee and gives him more than the contract entitles him to,<sup>21</sup> is within the promisor's power and does not afford any ground of objection to the promisee. The contract to make or not to make a will is generally irrevocable,<sup>22</sup> without the consent of the parties,<sup>23</sup> when based on sufficient consideration,<sup>24</sup> and the contract remains in force after the revocation of the will.<sup>25</sup> Even where the contract contains a stipulation expressly permitting a revocation on certain conditions, the contract is irrevocable except in the man-

The promisee may elect to treat the contract as rescinded by the promisor's conduct.<sup>27</sup> A breach or nonperformance by the promisee of the obligations assumed by him as consideration for the promise affords no ground for rescission by the promisor unless it is so substantial and fundamental as to defeat the object of the agreement<sup>28</sup> or where the promisor's own conduct is the efficient cause provoking such nonperformance.<sup>29</sup>

Rescission by promisee One to whom property is to be left, in consideration of some enforceable obligation assumed by him in favor of the owner thereof, cannot rescind the contract and escape his obligation while the owner continues ready and willing to perform,<sup>30</sup> nor can the promisee, after accepting benefits under a will in part carrying out the agreement, rescind the contract.<sup>31</sup>

c. Modification and Merger

The parties to a contract for testamentary or similar disposition of property may modify it. Where, following the contract, a conveyance of the property affected by the agreement is made by the promisor to the promisee and accepted by the latter, the contract is merged in the conveyance and cannot thereafter be resorted to.

The parties to the contract may modify it,<sup>35</sup> but subsequent promises by the promisor to make some provision for the promisee other than that on the basis of which they originally contracted cannot take away rights under the original contract unless the promisee elects to accept such later promises in full performance of the agreement.<sup>36</sup> Where the beneficiary is a stranger to the contract and has no vested rights under it, the parties to the contract have the right to modify or change it at will without the consent of the beneficiaries.<sup>37</sup> A court may, however, refuse to make a new contract embracing intended modifications.<sup>38</sup>

Where, following the contract, a conveyance of the property affected by the agreement is made by the promisor to the promisee and accepted by the latter, the contract is merged in the conveyance and cannot thereafter be resorted to,<sup>39</sup> even though the conveyance, by reason of its recitals as to consideration, is voluntary in character and so not good as against outstanding equitable claims,<sup>40</sup> similarly, where the promisee subsequently executes a valid release and settlement of all claims against the promisor, or takes a bond covering such claims,<sup>41</sup> or where the parties redefine their several relations by a contract undertaking a full and complete arrangement of all matters between the parties, and settle and dispose of all their rights and claims against one another,<sup>42</sup> the later contract merges and destroys the earlier one, but the execution of a will pursuant to the contract does not operate to effect an abrogation of it under the doctrine of merger.<sup>43</sup>

d. Death of Beneficiary During Promisor's Lifetime

Where the contract made contemplates the contingency of the beneficiary's predeceasing the promisor and makes express provision therefor, the death of the latter in the promisor's lifetime does not put an end to the obligation of the contract.

Where the contract made contemplates the contingency of the beneficiary's predeceasing the promisor and makes express provision therefor, such as alternative terms to take effect in that event,<sup>44</sup> or where the written agreement was to be operative after the death of either or both parties,<sup>45</sup> or where after its occurrence, the promisor recognizes and confirms it as an obligation surviving the beneficiary's death,<sup>46</sup> the death of the latter in the promisor's lifetime does not put an end to the obligation of the contract. Moreover, even though the contract is one which would terminate at the promisee's death, the promisor may waive this feature of the contract and does so where he permits others, associated with the promisee in his lifetime in rendering the performance, to continue after his death and accepts such performance without giving notice within a reasonable time of an intention to consider the obligation as ended.<sup>47</sup>

Where no such elements are present to indicate the result intended by the parties in that contingency, it has been held that, where the promise is personal to the beneficiary and one which he alone can enforce, and he dies first, the promise does not survive and the promisor may, without any breach of his contract make an inconsistent disposition of the property,<sup>48</sup> so, in the closely analogous case where personal performance by the beneficiary is an essential ingredient in the contract, it has been held that the promisor, in this contingency, may rescind the contract<sup>49</sup> and the rule has been applied where, in return for the promise, a relative of the promisor, with his wife, undertakes to live with, care for, or support the promisor, and they do so until the death of such relative, although the widow remains ready and willing to continue the arrangement thereafter,<sup>50</sup> in that identical case, however, other courts have refused to treat the contract as terminable at the promisee's death<sup>51</sup>

Conversely, unless there are obligations still to be performed by the beneficiary and which can only be performed by him personally, his death prior to that of the promisor does not, it has been held, authorize a revocation or discharge the promisor from his obligation<sup>52</sup> The prior death of a promisee may, however, cause a lapsed legacy or devise<sup>53</sup>

Where the promise is for the benefit of two or more beneficiaries conjointly, and one or some of them predecease the promisor, it has been held that the survivor or survivors at the time of the promisor's death are entitled to the whole of the provision promised<sup>54</sup> Under a contract to bequeath property to a beneficiary, in consideration of which the beneficiary would in turn bequeath to another beneficiary as much of the property as remained in his hands at the time of death, it has been held that the death of such other beneficiary before the death of any of the parties to the contract extinguishes any right of the first beneficiary under the contract,<sup>55</sup> where the original beneficiary predeceases the promisor, the bequest abates as to him,<sup>56</sup> and the subsequent beneficiary has no vested right which he may pass on to his heirs or assignees<sup>57</sup>

e. Changes in Promisor's Matrimonial Status

Changes in the promisor's matrimonial status may or may not, depending on the circumstances, work a termination of his contract to make a will

Where the promisee in return for the promised legacy has agreed to live with, and make a home for, the promisor and thereafter marries him, the marriage contract, imposing on her, as it does, all the obligations undertaken by the prior contract, supersedes it and revokes a will pursuant to it, and leaves the promisee under a duty of performance independent of the contract so that there is no legal consideration for the promise and it cannot be enforced<sup>58</sup> So, where the promisee undertakes to act toward the promisor as a daughter, in return for the promise of a legacy, the fact that a marriage ceremony is performed between them, even though for some reason the marriage is invalid, puts an end to the contract and leaves the promisor no longer bound by the promise<sup>59</sup> A valid contract between husband and wife that he will will her a certain part of his estate is not destroyed by divorce,<sup>60</sup> nor is a stepfather's contract to leave property to stepchildren dissolved by a divorce from their mother even though an unreasonable allowance of alimony is made in her favor<sup>61</sup>

§ 118. Ratification and Affirmance

Although there is authority to the contrary, where the contract is voidable because of the personal disability of the promisor, it may be ratified after removal of the disability.

Where the contract, although unenforceable, is not void but only voidable because of the personal disability of the promisor, it has been held that it may, after removal of the disability, be ratified so as to be enforceable thereafter,<sup>62</sup> but there is other authority reaching a contrary result on a like state of facts.<sup>63</sup> In order that subsequent transactions may be a renewal of the original contract, they must be between the persons who were parties there-

§ 119. Subsequently Executed Transfers, Encumbrances, or Wills

Agreements based on valuable consideration to make a particular disposition of property will not be allowed to be defeated by a conveyance to persons who are not bona fide purchasers, during the lifetime of the promisor

Although bona fide purchasers of property forming the subject matter of the agreement to will will not be disturbed in the interest which they have by their purchase acquired,<sup>66</sup> agreements based on valuable consideration to make a particular disposition of property will not be allowed to be defeated by a conveyance to persons who are not bona fide purchasers, during the lifetime of the promisor,<sup>67</sup> particularly where such conveyance is procured by the exercise of fraud or undue influence,<sup>68</sup> is made with the fraudulent intent of defeating the contract,<sup>69</sup> or is in the nature of a testamentary disposition,<sup>70</sup> nor will such agreements be defeated by a will<sup>71</sup> Likewise, where the promisor falsely admits the existence of a debt to another in order to cut down the amount which the promisee will receive under the contract, the creditor can assert no right to payment superior to the promisee's right under the contract,<sup>72</sup> even where an encumbrance is given to secure such fictitious obligation<sup>73</sup> It has been held, however, that the execution of a will pursuant to an agreement to devise particular realty to a devisee does not limit the testator's right thereafter to sell such realty or make a contract for its sale, since the will does not become effective until the death of the testator<sup>74</sup>

Where the contract covers only what property the promisor may leave at his death or a fraction or proportion thereof, the promisor remains free to use, control, and dispose of property in his lifetime,<sup>75</sup> and transfers or conveyances by him before his death are valid unless made with intent to defraud,<sup>76</sup> even though no consideration therefor is given<sup>77</sup> Such contracts do not prevent the making of gifts by the promisor in his lifetime<sup>78</sup> provided the gifts are reasonable, absolute, bona fide, not testamentary in effect, and not made for the purpose of defeating the contract or having such effect<sup>79</sup> Even under such contracts, however, no disposition during the promisor's lifetime made with the intention or for the purpose of defeating the contract will be allowed to stand, as against the claims of the promisee under the agreement,<sup>80</sup> at any rate where the transferee is not a bona fide purchaser<sup>81</sup>

Adverse will or trust

Where father made will, supported by sufficient consideration, bequeathing undivided two-thirds interest in his property to his children, rights of the children could not be affected by any adverse will or by the creation of a trust with extraordinary charges against their interest. An expense provision for the trustee could be charged against only so much of the father's estate as he could consistently with his prior testamentary contract make subject to the trust. The two-thirds interest which was affected by the testamentary contract with the children would be subject to father's debts and ordinary administration expenses, but not to the provisions of the testamentary trust subversive to the obligations of the testamentary contract

Moreover, where the contract covers the whole of the estate which the promisor may leave at his death, no disposition to take effect only at that time will be allowed to stand,<sup>82</sup> except where the transfer, although testamentary in character, is consistent with the contract,<sup>83</sup> although, even under such contracts, the testator may make subsequent contracts to leave specific property by will to other promisees, which will be good as against the residuary promisee<sup>84</sup> Where, however, the contract is to leave the promisee a particular fraction or proportion of the whole estate, the promisor may make specific bequests or devise to third persons which will carry a title not defeasible on the score of the contract,<sup>85</sup> as long as the promisee receives the agreed proportion of the whole value of the estate<sup>86</sup>

Where a conveyance, encumbrance, or transfer is of such character that it is ineffective as against the promisee, within the rules stated in this section, he may have it set aside,<sup>87</sup> unless the plaintiff is unable to establish a contract to devise or bequeath.<sup>88</sup>

§ 120. Rights of Surviving Spouse

Contracts to will or leave property, made before the promisor's marriage, vest irrevocable rights which cannot be defeated by a subsequent marriage where the wife, before the marriage, had notice of the agreement

property affected where such contracts are of record at the time of marriage<sup>90</sup> Where a will pursuant to the contract has been executed before the marriage, it has been held by some authority that the marriage does not operate as such a revocation by operation of law as to discharge the promisor from the obligation or to give the spouse any equal or superior right to the property affected by the agreement,<sup>91</sup> and by other authority that while the will is, like other wills, revoked by a subsequent marriage,<sup>92</sup> the contract and the obligations arising therefrom continue valid and enforceable<sup>93</sup>

Where the widow was without notice of the contract at the time of marriage, it has been held that the contract is not enforceable as against her interest, at least without important limitations<sup>94</sup> Nevertheless, such lack of notice does not in all cases or under all circumstances defeat the superiority of the promisee's right over her widow's rights,<sup>95</sup> the determination of the relative rights of the promisee and the spouse rests, it has been held, on their respective equities under all the circumstances<sup>96</sup> and where the equities predominate in favor of the spouse, the promisee's claim is inferior<sup>97</sup> although it is superior if the equities are in his favor<sup>98</sup>

A husband's contract during coverture cannot, it has been held, defeat the wife's right to a widow's share in his estate, without her consent,<sup>99</sup> a statute enabling a surviving spouse to take against, or in the absence of, a will limits the power of a married person to bind himself by contract to devise and bequeath his property in a manner which would deprive the surviving spouse of statutory rights<sup>1</sup>

Conflict between surviving spouse and promisee

In cases arising out of conflict between parties to whom a deceased person contracted to make testamentary disposition on one side and surviving spouse, asserting claim to elect to take against or in absence of will, on the other, rights of the promisees should be the same whether deceased fulfilled or broke his promise

Fraud

Where husband agreed with wife in settlement of litigation to deposit life policies, of which wife would be sole beneficiary, in safety deposit box and to pay premiums thereon,

On the other hand, where the widow's rights are statutory and merely extend to property owned by the husband at his decease, he is not prevented from disposing of or encumbering his property by lawful agreements during his life which will take priority over the interest the widow would have had if no contract had been made.<sup>2</sup> Even where a surviving spouse is contractually obligated to dispose of his property at his death in a certain manner, courts are slow to hold that he cannot dispose thereof in good faith during his lifetime, unless he has expressly agreed not to do so.<sup>3</sup>

§ 121. Promisee's Loss of Rights by Waiver, Estoppel, or Abandonment

A promisee may lose his rights under a contract to make a particular disposition of property by waiver, estoppel, or abandonment

Even after rights have accrued in favor of a promisee under a contract to make a particular disposition of property, he may lose them by waiver, estoppel, or abandonment,<sup>4</sup> but repudiation or abandonment of such rights, being contrary to the habits of mankind, must be made to appear clearly<sup>5</sup> and no such result follows unless the promisee, with a full knowledge of all the material facts, does or forbears the doing of something inconsistent with the right or with an intention to rely on it.<sup>6</sup> Whether there is an effective loss of rights in this manner is usually a question of fact.<sup>7</sup> Particularly where he continues to assert a claim thereto the promisee's subsequent removal from land to which he has moved and on which he has made improvements as consideration for a promise to leave it to him is not conclusive of an abandonment of his rights under the contract,<sup>8</sup> nor does the giving of security by the promisee for the performance of his obligations under a contract to make a particular disposition of property of itself constitute any waiver of its benefits.<sup>9</sup> The promisee's silence as to the existence of the contractual claim, even though continued for a considerable time after the promisor's death leaving the promise unperformed,<sup>10</sup> or at the time the promisor's executor requests him to pay obligations against him held by the estate,<sup>11</sup> or the presentation by him of claims against the estate,<sup>12</sup> even where such claims are for the very matters which constituted the consideration for the promise to leave the property,<sup>13</sup> does not, of itself and under all circumstances, debar the promisee from thereafter asserting his rights under the contract, and he is not estopped by an agreement for division saving his rights under the contract<sup>14</sup> by withdrawal of objections made by him to a partition of the property, on his allegations of ownership thereof, and receiving a share of that and the personal property,<sup>15</sup> or by continuing to pay rent to the promisor's estate on property which he occupies and which was promised him by the contract.<sup>16</sup>

The acquiescence in, or failing to object to, a will does not generally bar the promisee to claim under the contract,<sup>17</sup> and failure to object to the probate of a will does not estop the promisee to claim under an agreement to make a particular disposition of property by will<sup>18</sup> or a contract not to change or revoke a prior will,<sup>19</sup> nor does the fact that he actively participates in the probate proceedings to the extent of filing his election not to take under the will which was made.<sup>20</sup> Indeed, even though he endeavors to dissuade other legatees from contesting the will<sup>21</sup> or actively aids the

but husband took policies and stock certificates from safety deposit box and changed beneficiary, so as to strip himself of all property except disability income under policies, wife was entitled to have share of beneficiary set aside as in fraud of her statutory rights as surviving spouse executors in a will contest over it,<sup>22</sup> those circumstances, while persuasive to show an abandonment of contract rights, are not necessarily conclusive of that fact, an endeavor by the promisee amicably to settle a controversy among the heirs does not preclude the promisee from claiming under the contract<sup>23</sup>

Where, however, being appointed administrator of such inconsistent will, he makes no claim under the contract until after proceeding with the administration to the point where the estate is ready for distribution, recognizing throughout the rights of the designated legatees,<sup>24</sup> or where, as executor, he has the will probated and presents and continues to assert, even after the contract suit is instituted, a claim based on services forming the consideration for the alleged promise,<sup>25</sup> in the absence of explanation or excuse, he cannot claim under the contract. Acceptance of money paid him by the promisor's personal representative, when the payment is not referable to the will or the contract, as for example, an acceptance of his distributive share in an intestate estate does not operate as a waiver or abandonment of the promisee's contract rights,<sup>26</sup> neither does the execution of a release to decedent's personal representatives when surrounded by circumstances of want of full information of the claim by both the promisee and the executors and manifesting an intention that it shall be considered as only partial and operative as to matters other than the contract<sup>27</sup>. The promisee's use of money bequeathed to him under a will does not estop the promisee to claim the entire estate under a contractual agreement, where the promisee uses the money only after being urged to do so by the principal beneficiary under the will<sup>28</sup>. Explanatory circumstances which have been mentioned as tending to relieve the promisee's conduct from the imputation of any intention to waive or abandon his rights include advice of counsel<sup>29</sup> and the fact that, during the period of the promisee's non-assertion of his contract rights, the written contract was lost or mislaid<sup>30</sup>

Election between will and contract Where provision is made for the promisee by the promisor's will, and the promisee accepts without protest benefits under the testamentary provision in his favor, the promisee does not thereby waive or abandon his claim under the contract where the provision made by the will gives to the promisee only a part of what he was promised under the contract and the testamentary benefits accepted by him are only those, or a part of those, to which he is entitled thereunder,<sup>31</sup> even where he declares his satisfaction with the will in express terms<sup>32</sup>. Where, on the other hand, instead of merely giving a part of the contractual benefits and nothing else, the testamentary provision, made with the intention of serving as a substitute for the promisee's claim, gives to him benefits not contracted for, in lieu of those agreed on, and he accepts such substitutional benefits accorded by will, he loses the right to assert any claim dependent on the agreement<sup>33</sup>. Where there is a case proper for an election, the election as between the two sources of right is total and there is no right to take, in certain respects, under the will while reserving the right, in other respects, to claim under the contract.<sup>34</sup>

Equities held not to outweigh contractual rights

Where son of one party to agreement that parties would consider their separate property as community property and make wills so property would descend in equal shares to son, and children of parties, had been paid adequate salary by enterprises owned by parties, that son had managed parties' business enterprises did not create equities in him for recompense which outweighed the contractual rights of children of parties, and did not entitle him to probate of later will which violated the contract.

Change of condition

(1) In order to impress trust on realty on ground of oral contract to devise realty in consideration of services, more than mere nonperformance of such contract must be shown, and it must appear that plaintiff in performance of and because of the contract, was compelled to and in fact did change her condition in such manner and to such an extent that in the circumstances, failure to devise the property amounted to fraud on plaintiff.

Me—Lutick v Sileika, 14 A 2d 706, 137 Me 30

(2) In action to impress trust on realty on ground of oral contract to devise realty in consideration of

created or enforced on the property<sup>48</sup> Relief may be afforded during the lifetime of the promisor,<sup>49</sup> when particular property is involved<sup>50</sup> It has been held that an oral contract for a devise cannot be enforced at law because of the statute of frauds and the statute of wills<sup>51</sup>

Where one promises to make a will in consideration of another's promise or act, if no will is left the courts will effectuate the result which the promised will was to accomplish<sup>52</sup> Where the promisor executes a will and covenants not to change it, but nevertheless revokes it, the other party may obtain redress by pursuing at law or in equity such remedy for breach of contract as may be available<sup>53</sup> Where the agreement is to make no will but to allow property to go by the rules of descent, each heir in his own name may maintain ejectment for his portion of the premises without resorting to an action for damages<sup>54</sup> A promisee may set up a contract as a defense against others claiming absolute title under a devise at variance with the contract,<sup>55</sup> and the promisee may set up the claim as a defense to an obligation held against him by the estate, where the decedent's contract was that he should be relieved from the payment thereof,<sup>56</sup> or may urge it as a counterclaim when sued on the obligation<sup>57</sup> A person inducing the breach of a contract for a particular disposition of property may be sued in tort<sup>58</sup>

The remedy for a wrong arising out of the violation of a contract in respect of the making of a will cannot be litigated in a probate court, but must be pursued in a court of law or a court of equity<sup>59</sup> While there is some authority holding that, where a will is made pursuant to the contract, the promisee may enjoin the probate after the testator's death of a later will revoking it,<sup>60</sup> there is other authority holding that the contract cannot be made the basis for enjoining probate<sup>61</sup> It cannot be set up, in proceedings in probate, to defeat the probate of the will<sup>62</sup> even though an earlier will complying with the contract and revoked by the later one has been made and erroneously admitted to probate,<sup>63</sup> nor can the claim be presented in an action between other persons for the assertion of a dower right,<sup>64</sup> or considered in a proceeding for distribution of the estate<sup>65</sup> Where, however, a will constituting or complying with the contract has been admitted to probate, the contract may be set up as a defense to an attempt to set aside the probate in order to prepare the way for probating a later will<sup>66</sup>

The promisor of a contract to make a will devising realty may have the benefit of such equitable rights and remedies as to it while he still lives as would apply to other contracts relating to real estate,<sup>67</sup> including the privilege conferred by statute giving a grantor the right to rescind a conveyance made on promise of support<sup>68</sup> On a breach by the promisee, the promisor may maintain an action to rescind or cancel the contract<sup>69</sup>

§ 123. Actions for Goods or Services

- a Right of action and defenses
- b Procedure
- c Damages, amount of recovery

a. Right of Action and Defenses

One who, in return for an agreement to make a particular disposition of property by will, has rendered services or other consideration to the promisor, under such circumstances that an implied contract may be asserted as a basis of recovery, may sue and recover the reasonable value of such services or other consideration in an action based on quantum meruit.

Where a person renders service to another, relying solely on the testator's generosity and in the mere expectation of a legacy, there being no contract, either express or implied, that compensation shall be made therefor by will, and the party for whom the services are rendered dies without making such provision, no action to recover for such services will lie in favor of the person rendering them<sup>70</sup> However, one who, in return for an agreement to make a particular disposition of property by will, has rendered services or has furnished money, support, or property to the promisor for his benefit, under circumstances such that, notwithstanding the existence of an express contract, an implied contract may be asserted as a basis of recovery, may sue and recover the reasonable value of such services or other consideration in an action based on quantum meruit<sup>71</sup>

Resort may not ordinarily be had to the common counts where the express contract remains alive and in force, unbroken and unrepudiated<sup>72</sup> Thus, this remedy is not generally available while the promisor continues alive and his contract unbroken and unrepudiated,<sup>73</sup> as where, without repudiating a will complying with the contract, he has refused to accept further performance by the promisee<sup>74</sup> or where, although he has made a later inconsistent will, he has not repudiated the contract so as to bring notice thereof home to the promisee<sup>75</sup> This rule preventing recovery because of an outstanding express contract is subject, however, to the qualification that where the contract is an entirety and contains several provisions, on a breach or repudiation of any of them, although the specific provision as to the purposed testamentary provision is not repudiated, the promisee may accept the breach as infecting the whole contract and sue on the common counts<sup>76</sup> A defaulting promisee is not at liberty to treat the contract as void and sue on the quantum meruit if the promisor continues willing to perform<sup>77</sup> The action is available where the express contract has been abandoned by mutual consent.<sup>78</sup>

A promisee who has made a contract with decedent for the sole benefit of a third person cannot waive the express contract and recover in quantum meruit, while the cause of action remains valid and outstanding in the beneficiary without having been surrendered or lost<sup>79</sup> Moreover, plaintiff must have given goods or services which afford him a basis for recovery and, thus, one who is merely the designated beneficiary in a contract between others,<sup>80</sup> or one who, although himself the promisee and furnishing the consideration, has not given as consideration anything in the nature of services or of property,<sup>81</sup> cannot recover in an action of quantum meruit. The right of action, when it exists, is not defeated by plaintiff's failure to present his claim or to demand an accounting and settlement in decedent's lifetime, at least where the conduct of the two was continuously consistent with the claim,<sup>82</sup> by the unsuccessful termination of a prior suit, brought during decedent's life, on the ground that it was prematurely brought,<sup>83</sup> or of a suit for specific performance against the personal representative,<sup>84</sup> by an executory accord between plaintiff and decedent's heirs,<sup>85</sup> or by the birth of a child to the promisor subsequent to the passing of the goods and services from plaintiff to him.<sup>86</sup> Illicit relations between the parties present no bar to a recovery unless they entered into, and formed some part of, the basis of the understanding or agreement for compensation.<sup>87</sup>

Statute of frauds The right to recover on a quantum meruit for goods or services furnished decedent is not impaired by the fact that the contract is void under the statute of frauds.<sup>88</sup>

Accrual of action, limitations A right of action on quantum meruit for goods and services rendered the promisor does not ordinarily accrue until his death and suit before then is premature.<sup>89</sup> However, where the promisor commits an anticipatory breach by repudiation of the contract, and plaintiff elects to accept it, the cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations starts to run from the time of repudiation<sup>90</sup> without either advancement to the time when the services were rendered<sup>91</sup> or postponement to the time of death.<sup>92</sup> Also, where the performer has been prevented by illness

from completing his contract, an action on quantum meruit is not premature although brought in the lifetime of the promisor.<sup>93</sup> Where the promisor puts it out of his power to perform an agreement to compensate by will, the promisee may recover the reasonable value of services and support by an action brought against the promisor in the latter's lifetime,<sup>94</sup> although recovery may be denied where the proof does not show that the promisor has put it out of his power to perform.<sup>95</sup>

In the absence of repudiation or anticipatory breach, where the action in quantum meruit is rested purely on an implied promise or an understanding that goods or services rendered are to be paid for, without more, the statute of limitations begins to run from the time the services or goods are furnished and not from the date of the promisor's death,<sup>96</sup> but where the agreement to make compensation or provision by will or after death is shown in explanation of the delay, no action accrues until then so that, even as to actions for the value of goods or services, the statutory period starts running only from the time of the promisor's death and not before,<sup>97</sup> even though the promisor makes an inconsistent will<sup>98</sup> or, during his life, refuses to permit or prevents complete performance.<sup>99</sup> The promisee has been held entitled to recover on a quantum meruit although the right of action for breach of the agreement was barred by limitation.<sup>1</sup>

Satisfaction by legacy No action for the value of goods or services is maintainable where the promisor has, at his death, left a will which satisfies the contract, plaintiff being limited in such a case to the testamentary provision,<sup>2</sup> and so, where a testamentary provision is made for plaintiff, intended as compensation for the goods or services bestowed on the testator, and plaintiff elects to accept the devise or bequest thus made, he cannot thereafter claim

under, or recover on, the quantum meruit,<sup>3</sup> at least where the legacy is ample and adequate to satisfy the claim,<sup>4</sup> where it is not ample for that purpose, according to some authority, plaintiff may recover for the excess in value of the goods, and services over the amount of the testamentary provision.<sup>5</sup> Where the property which, by the will, is intended for plaintiff, is conveyed to him by decedent in his lifetime, it has been held that, unless such conveyance is agreed to be in satisfaction of the claim and in lieu of the devise, the claim may still be sued on, not being satisfied by the conveyance or by the inoperative provision in the will.<sup>6</sup> It has been held that where services are rendered under an express agreement to pay for them by a legacy, without any agreement as to its amount or character, the legatee has an election between accepting the legacy in full payment, or, if insufficient to compensate for the reasonable value of the services, to reject it and enforce a claim for reasonable value of services.<sup>7</sup>

The general rules of procedure in civil actions apply in actions by a promisee for goods or services.

The rules which apply to procedure in civil actions generally apply in actions for goods or services by one in whose favor another has promised to make a will.<sup>8</sup> Where the services rendered by a wife in consequence of a promised testamentary provision are of such character that the husband is entitled to the earnings, a suit to recover their value is properly brought by him,<sup>9</sup> where they are not, she may herself sue for them.<sup>10</sup> Where statutes exist permitting the enforcement against heirs and devisees of claims against decedent, plaintiff may sue such persons in an action quantum meruit for services and need not bring the suit against decedent's personal representative as defendant.<sup>11</sup>

or declaration need state only matters necessary to be set forth in such actions generally, and need not refer at all to a contract looking to testamentary provision,<sup>12</sup> the inclusion of allegations with respect to the contract is an indication that the suit is one for breach of contract, rather than to recover for services performed,<sup>13</sup> although a complaint may be good as on quantum meruit, notwithstanding recitals with reference to a parol contract, since the contract may serve only to rebut the presumption that the services were rendered gratuitously or under a mere hope of reward.<sup>14</sup> Where forms of action are abolished and the pleading is sufficient if it states facts forming the basis for an action, a complaint stating facts showing a good cause of action quantum meruit is sufficient although the pleader mistakes the theory of his case and asks damages for breach of the express contract to make a will.<sup>15</sup> Where services are rendered during several distinct separated periods but always under one original agreement, renewed and ratified as such each time the services are resumed, and not under separate agreements on each occasion, the whole of the services constitutes only one single cause of action and need only be pleaded as such.<sup>16</sup>

Under a general denial, defendant may, it has been held, take advantage of a satisfaction of the debt, without any special plea.<sup>17</sup> A variance between the pleadings and the proof, in order to affect the right of recovery, must be real and material,<sup>18</sup> of such nature that defendant shall have been misled or surprised to his injury in maintaining his defense.<sup>19</sup> In this connection the pleadings are to be construed liberally.<sup>20</sup> Proof of a contract to compensate in a particular manner is not such a variance as will defeat recovery under pleadings merely setting up a claim in quantum meruit and alleging that the services forming the basis of the claim were rendered on a promise or understanding that they were to be paid for.<sup>21</sup>

Evidence. The burden of proving the elements of the cause of action such as the performance and the value of services and that they were to be compensated for is on plaintiff,<sup>22</sup> the burden as to matters of defense rests on defendant.<sup>23</sup> While the presumption that services rendered between persons in family relations are gratuitous prevails in cases where the services have been rendered by one who claims to have expected testamentary compensation,<sup>24</sup> the presumption is rebuttable,<sup>25</sup> moreover, it is inapplicable unless plaintiff and deceased did live together as members of one family when the services were rendered.<sup>26</sup> A presumption to the contrary exists where there is no element of kinship or family relationship between the parties.<sup>27</sup> A presumption may exist that plaintiff received payment for his services.<sup>28</sup> An obligation to pay by will for services performed for the decedent cannot fairly be inferred from an implied or express obligation merely to pay.<sup>29</sup>

The ordinary rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil actions apply to actions for the value of goods or services given in consequence of a promised disposition of property by will or after death.<sup>30</sup>

The general rule as to the weight and quality of the evidence is no different from that in actions generally.<sup>31</sup> Claimant must prove his claim by a fair preponderance of the evidence,<sup>32</sup> and the evidence must be clear and convincing,<sup>33</sup> but it is not essential that the agreement be established by direct testimony<sup>34</sup> and it is sufficient that the conduct of the parties and the surrounding facts and circumstances clearly indicate the existence of an agreement or understanding that compensation should be made.<sup>35</sup>

Questions for court and jury; instructions While the court may, in a proper case, direct a verdict,<sup>36</sup> ordinarily the determination of questions of fact, such as the existence of an agreement or understanding that goods or services are to be paid for, is for the jury<sup>37</sup> or other fact-finding agency<sup>38</sup> under proper instructions by the court.<sup>39</sup>

c. Damages; Amount of Recovery

The measure of damages is the reasonable value of the services rendered or the goods or money supplied or furnished the promisor

The measure of damages is the reasonable value of the services rendered or the goods or money supplied or furnished the promisor<sup>40</sup> and not the value of the provision or disposition of property promised to plaintiff on the promisor's death<sup>41</sup>. The recovery cannot, however, exceed in amount the promised provision<sup>42</sup> or the sum demanded by plaintiff in his pleadings<sup>43</sup>. In estimating the value of services, regard should be paid to the situation of the parties<sup>44</sup> and the nature of the services<sup>45</sup>. Declarations of the testator indicating the amount of the contemplated provision should be considered as showing his estimate of the value of the services to him, in arriving at the amount recoverable<sup>46</sup>. Plaintiff is entitled to a recovery of money advanced or paid to the promisor<sup>47</sup> and of the value of improvements made by him on promisor's land<sup>48</sup>.

The value or amount of the estate left by decedent cannot be made the basis for determining damages which depend instead on the value of the goods or services supplied him,<sup>49</sup> and it has even been held that any consideration of the value of the estate is improper as it may improperly influence damages,<sup>50</sup> but other authorities hold that evidence of its value may properly be received and considered as shedding light on the style and standard of living of deceased and thus aiding in the formation of a proper estimate as to the value of the services<sup>51</sup>. Although it has been held that an account for services rendered is not an interest-bearing demand,<sup>52</sup> the value of the goods or services having been computed, addition should then be made of interest on the sum arrived at from the time or times when the debt accrued<sup>53</sup> and deductions of all sums that plaintiff received under such circumstances as to constitute them proper applications on the debt<sup>54</sup>.

a. In General

In a proper case, an action for breach of contract will lie on a contract to make a particular disposition of property by will

Under appropriate circumstances, where the facts are such as to establish the requisite conditions for that class of actions, an action for breach of contract will lie on a contract to make a particular disposition of property by will or the like<sup>55</sup> and in some cases such an action is the only remedy available<sup>56</sup>. It has, for instance, been said that

Claim for amount which testator had agreed to provide in will as compensation for relative's acting as this is the only remedy available during the promisor's lifetime,<sup>57</sup> but, on the other hand, it has been said that on a repudiation or breach by the promisor in his lifetime a cause of action may accrue at once for rescission, for the recovery of damages, or for appropriate equitable relief<sup>58</sup> An action for damages for the breach is not proper where the disposition of the cause involves the determination of questions with respect to the estate on which the jury are not competent to pass<sup>59</sup> Such an action usually merits the careful scrutiny and skepticism of the court,<sup>60</sup> and the assertion of a contract diverting the statutory devolution of an estate must be regarded with grave suspicion<sup>61</sup>

Accrual and limitation of actions No right exists to sue on the contract previous to a breach<sup>62</sup> and normally no right of action accrues until the death of the promisor without having complied with the agreement,<sup>63</sup> although it has been held that the cause of action may accrue at the time of abandonment or anticipatory breach of the contract<sup>64</sup> The promisee is not bound to treat the conveyance of specific property to a third person as a breach of an agreement to leave it to him where the conveyance still leaves it within the promisor's power to perform<sup>65</sup> Where two persons contract to make a particular disposition of their property at their death, the cause of action arises at, and not until, the death of the survivor of the two,<sup>66</sup> but, where one person contracts to will the property, to take effect at the death of himself and another, whoever should survive, and dies before such other without having made the will, the cause of action arises immediately on the death of the promisor without postponement until the death of such other<sup>67</sup> When a breach of the agreement exists by reason of the promisor's death without making the disposition of the property which he contracted to do, the promisee may sue at once without awaiting the settlement of the accounts of the decedent's representatives,<sup>68</sup> the fact that the deductions essential to be made in computing the damages are as yet unascertained does not prevent his doing so<sup>69</sup>

b. Parties

An action for damages for breach of contract may be maintained by the beneficiary although he was not the promisee or the person from whom the consideration moved

Under statutes authorizing suits by the real parties in interest,<sup>70</sup> or wherever the sole beneficiary of a contract may sue on it,<sup>71</sup> the action may be maintained by the beneficiary, although he was not the promisee or the person from whom the consideration moved,<sup>72</sup> but, where a third person is denied the right to sue on contracts made for his benefit, a result to the contrary is reached<sup>73</sup> Under an agreement to leave property by will to several persons, share and share alike, constituting a several and not a joint undertaking, they cannot join in presenting their claims against the estate of the promisor,<sup>74</sup> and, where similar contracts have been made by the deceased with two promisees and both are broken, they need not join in the suit, since there is no requirement that two or more plaintiffs join separate causes of action in a single suit<sup>75</sup>

c. Pleading

The general rules of pleadings in actions on contracts apply in actions for damages for breach of contracts for testamentary or similar disposition

The principles governing pleadings in actions on contracts apply in actions on contracts of the character under consideration<sup>82</sup> Accordingly, plaintiff's petition or complaint must allege all the facts necessary to support a recovery,<sup>83</sup> such as the existence or terms of the contract,<sup>84</sup> a sufficient consideration,<sup>85</sup> performance by plaintiff of the obligations undertaken by him,<sup>86</sup> and a breach of the contract by deceased,<sup>87</sup> with sufficient clearness and certainty,<sup>88</sup> and the omission of a necessary allegation renders the pleading fatally defective<sup>89</sup>

It has been held that plaintiff may in one paragraph plead the breach of the contract and in another proceed on the common counts without thereby rendering either paragraph subject to demurrer<sup>90</sup> In jurisdictions where the statute of frauds to be available as a bar must be specially pleaded, defendant must, in order to avail himself of that defense allege the fact that the agreement was unwritten<sup>91</sup> Statutes requiring the nonperformance of conditions precedent to be pleaded have no reference to cases where the claim is that the promisee never gave the agreed consideration for the promise and an objection of that character may be raised by the general denial and an averment of nonperformance, the failure not being as to a condition precedent but as to a dependent covenant forming the consideration<sup>92</sup> A special demurrer to plaintiff's complaint based on the breach of a contract to will must, in order to be sufficient, point out clearly and distinctly the vice in the complaint<sup>93</sup>

d. Trial

In an action for breach of a contract for testamentary disposition, questions of fact should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions from the court

While the court may, where a proper case for such action is made out, dismiss the complaint or direct a verdict,<sup>99</sup> the determination of whether or not the evidence shows the existence of the facts essential to the action is primarily for the jury,<sup>1</sup>

aided by proper instructions by the court<sup>2</sup>

e. Damages

In an action for damages for breach of a contract to make a testamentary or similar disposition of property, the measure of damages is what the promisee has lost by the promisor's failure to keep his agreement.

In an action for damages for breach of contract, the measure of damages is what the promisee has lost by the promisor's failure to keep his agreement,<sup>3</sup> which is ordinarily the value of the property agreed to be bequeathed or devised,<sup>4</sup> or of the provision or disposition for plaintiff's benefit agreed to be made,<sup>5</sup> less whatever deductions lawfully should be made,<sup>6</sup> and not the value of the services rendered or other consideration furnished by the promisee<sup>7</sup> In at least one jurisdiction, the measure of damages for the breach of a contract to will all or a part of an estate to a person in return for personal services is the value of the services rendered and not the estate promised,<sup>8</sup> but the measure of damages for the breach of a contract to will a specific sum in exchange for services is the promised benefit, rather than the value of the services rendered.<sup>9</sup> It has been held that where the consideration for the promise is a past or executed consideration consisting of services performed or liabilities incurred before the promise, the measure of damages is the reasonable value of such services or the amount of the precedent liability and not the value of the property promised or the amount which the promisor agreed to bestow on the promisee.<sup>10</sup> So, too, where the promise is in terms to make compensation for services to be rendered, the measure of damages is the reasonable value of the services rendered under the contract,<sup>11</sup> together with interest computed, according to some authority, from the date of their rendition,<sup>12</sup> but, according to other authority, only from the time of the promisor's death.<sup>13</sup>

Where the measure of damages rests on the value of the property, it is computed on the basis of the market value thereof at the time of the promisor's death,<sup>14</sup> where it is determined by reference to the value of services, it depends on the character of the services<sup>15</sup> and is based on the actual value of the services at the time of their rendition.<sup>16</sup> A debt owed by the promisee to the decedent<sup>17</sup> and any money or property already paid, or left, to plaintiff in partial satisfaction of the debt is to be deducted,<sup>18</sup> the damages being, in case there has been such partial performance of the contract, the difference between the property promised and the property given,<sup>19</sup> but the amount or value of gifts made by the promisor to the promisee without any reference to the contract obligation but purely as gifts is not deductible.<sup>20</sup> Thus, under an agreement to leave specific property, the deduction is not of the whole value of all devises or bequests to the promisee but of only so much as forms a part of the property promised and constitutes a partial performance of the undertaking,<sup>21</sup> where the will does not indicate an intention that the property left the promisee shall apply on or discharge the indebtedness.<sup>22</sup>

The whole or a proportional share of the expenses of administration is deductible in computing the amount of recovery where the contract was to give to the promisee the whole or a proportional share of the promisor's estate at his death.<sup>23</sup> Where the contract is to will the promisee all the property except a specified amount as a bequest, the funeral expenses and the bequest are deducted from plaintiff's judgment.<sup>24</sup> Equity may, in a proper case, impound the proceeds arising from the sale of the property affected by the contract to satisfy a claim for damages for breach of the contract to devise.<sup>25</sup> No substantial recovery can be had for the damages sustained where the damages are not susceptible of monetary calculation,<sup>26</sup> and a breach of a contract to make a will results in no damage to the

§ 126. — Evidence

In an action for damages for breach of a contract for testamentary disposition of property, the burden of establishing a contract to devise or bequeath property is on the plaintiff, and claims of this character must be established by evidence which is clear and convincing

The burden of establishing a contract to devise or bequeath property is on plaintiff,<sup>28</sup> who must, likewise, prove performance by him of his own obligations.<sup>29</sup> Strict proof of both the contract and the consideration is required,<sup>30</sup> but this does not mean that the proof must be so clear as to exclude any controversy over the evidence.<sup>31</sup> When a prima facie case for plaintiff is made out, the burden is on defendant to disprove any element thereof of the existence of which he denies,<sup>32</sup> or any affirmative defense asserted in opposition to the action, such as abandonment of his rights by plaintiff.<sup>33</sup> While plaintiff must, ordinarily, prove a breach by the promisor, as one of the elements essential to his action,<sup>34</sup> where an estate has been probated as an intestate estate, the burden is not on plaintiff to negative the existence of a will but on defendant to show that one was made, if performance by execution of a will is made a ground of defense.<sup>35</sup>

The rules with respect to the admissibility of evidence, prevailing in civil actions generally, have been applied to actions on contracts of this character.<sup>36</sup> The contract must be established by the mode of proof legally permissible in establishing other contracts.<sup>37</sup>

Claims of this character must be established by evidence that is clear and convincing,<sup>38</sup> or, as otherwise expressed, by evidence that is clear and certain,<sup>39</sup> clear, cogent, and convincing,<sup>40</sup> clear, precise, and indubitable,<sup>41</sup> or clear, satisfactory, and convincing.<sup>42</sup> An oral contract to make a will cannot be established by loose or casual conversation.<sup>43</sup> Plaintiff is bound to make out his case by a fair preponderance of the evidence,<sup>44</sup> but ordinarily he is not required to do more,<sup>45</sup> although it has been held that one seeking to establish an oral contract must establish it beyond a reasonable doubt,<sup>46</sup> that the proof must leave no reasonable doubt that the contract as pleaded was in fact made and has been performed by the parties relying on the contract,<sup>47</sup> and that it is not sufficient that the contract be established by a preponderance of the testimony.<sup>48</sup> The jury may, in its discretion, reject evidence under circumstances which might satisfy them were the promisor living<sup>49</sup> or in the event of a failure of corroboration by disinterested witnesses,<sup>50</sup> and should scrutinize it carefully in the light of the surrounding circumstances,<sup>51</sup> but they are not required to do so and it is not essential that the case be made out in all substantial particulars by disinterested witnesses.<sup>52</sup> The contract can be established by circumstantial testimony.<sup>53</sup>

VI. NATURE, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY

A. GENERAL NATURE AND ESSENTIALS OF WILL

§ 127(1). In General

The requisites of a valid will are that it be an instrument in writing, that it be executed as prescribed by statute, with testamentary intent, that it make a disposition of property to take effect after death, and that it be by its own nature ambulatory and revocable during the lifetime of the maker.

As discussed supra § 1, a "will" is the legal declaration of a man's intentions, which he wills to be performed after his death, and the requisites of a valid will are that it be an instrument in writing, that it be executed as prescribed by statute, with testamentary intent, that it make a disposition of property to take effect after death, and that it be by its own nature ambulatory and revocable during the lifetime of the maker.<sup>62</sup> The subject matter of a will is bounty and, therefore, such an instrument is a complete stranger to the doctrine of consideration,<sup>63</sup> that is, a will is ordinarily without valuable consideration and lacks the element of present existing contractual right.<sup>64</sup> The theory on which the right to make a will rests implies that a person controlling his property in life may determine its dominion after death and direct who shall make distribution of it.<sup>65</sup> A testator can have but one last will,<sup>66</sup> and the validity of a proffered will depends not only on its form and execution, but also on the fact that it was in existence as a testamentary instrument as of testator's death.<sup>67</sup>

The right to dispose of property by will at death is a favorite of the law,<sup>68</sup> and it is a valuable right which will be sustained whenever possible.<sup>69</sup> The courts have the duty, in so far as it is compatible with the public interest, to effectuate the devolutionary wishes of a deceased person,<sup>70</sup> and they are diligent to guard the right of a testator to dispose of his property as he pleases.<sup>71</sup> It is not the policy of the law to seek grounds for avoiding devises and bequests, but to deal with them so as to uphold and enforce them, if possible, consistently with rules of law,<sup>72</sup> and a will should not be declared invalid except for compelling reasons.<sup>73</sup> A court in performing the duty of effectuating the testator's wishes, is, in effect, an additional party to every litigation affecting the disposal of the assets of the deceased.<sup>74</sup>

§ 127(2). Ambulatory and Revocable Character

As a general rule, during the lifetime of the testator, a will is and remains ambulatory, and so a will is revocable or subject to being changed or superseded by the testator at any time during his life

Intent

Testator, by use of word "misfortune" in will giving his property to his wife in case of any misfortune occurring in the future, used the word as synonymous with "death" and intended will to take effect on his death

N Y—In re Montuori's Will, 40 N Y S 2d 414, 179 Misc 711

Forgiveness of mortgage

Where, after mortgage was executed, mortgagee in executing will forgave mortgage, and mortgagor without knowledge of will voluntarily paid mortgage, which payment mortgagee knowingly accepted and for which she executed a satisfaction piece, provisions of will became effective only upon probate and could have no retroactive effect upon mortgagee's right to enforce payment of mortgage during her lifetime, and mortgagor was not entitled to a claim against mortgagee's estate regardless whether mortgagee requested repayment of mortgage or whether mortgagee's executrix withheld terms of will from mortgagor and induced payment of mortgage

The exercise of a power of appointment by will occurs at time of donee's death, because a will only takes effect as of time of death of testator

devisee, until that time,<sup>89</sup> even though the will is delivered to a beneficiary while the testator still lives,<sup>90</sup> but on his death it becomes effective, at once,<sup>91</sup> or not at all.<sup>92</sup> So the execution of a will does not preclude deceased from disposing of his property by gift or in any manner that he might desire, subsequent to the execution of the will and during deceased's lifetime.<sup>93</sup> A will does, however, have inchoate existence from the time of its making, even though it is not consummate until the testator dies,<sup>94</sup> and for purposes other than a disposition

§ 129. Testamentary Intent

In order that a document may be operative as a will, it must have been intended when it was executed to operate as a will, that is, to create a revocable disposition of the maker's property to take effect at his death. No particular form of words is necessary to show a testamentary intent, and there is no definite, fixed rule by which the presence or absence of testamentary intent may be determined.

Animus testandi is essential to a will,<sup>96</sup> that being

Intention or purpose

(1) "Animus testandi" is intention or serious purpose to make will and is an essential to validity of will
Del—In re Kemp's Will, 186 A 890, 7 WW Harr 514

(2) The "animus testandi" required to constitute a paper writing a last "will" and testament is more than an intent to execute a will, and it is the intent to presently devise by the paper writing being then executed and that such writing shall have the effect of a will
NC—In re Taylor's Will, 17 SE 2d 654, 220 NC 524

(3) The nature of the statutory right of making a will requires that all considerations which enter into such a document should be solemnly, its distinguishing feature, and the thing that makes an instrument a will<sup>97</sup> So, in order that a document may be operative as a will, it must have been intended when it was executed to operate as a will,<sup>98</sup> except as instructions or memoranda for the preparation of a will may be given testamentary effect where an act of God prevents the completion of the instrument in regular form, as discussed infra § 167 In other words, it must appear from the paper claimed to be a will that the decedent intended by the very paper to make a disposition of his property,<sup>99</sup> and the mere fact that an instrument is executed with two witnesses, as required for wills, does not make it a will where it was not intended as such.<sup>1</sup> The animus testandi must exist at the time the instrument is executed,<sup>2</sup> and the paper must express a genuine present and not merely a future testamentary intent,<sup>3</sup> but it has also been

Testamentary function

A will must reflect an intent by maker to perform some testamentary function, such as the post-obit disposition of the property of the testator, the appointment of a testamentary guardian, or the naming of an executor

N Y.—In re Hefner's Will, 122 NY S 2d 252.

Concurrence of intention

(1) The intentions to make a will and to dispose of a person's estate in manner described in a paper writing signed by such person must concur to render the paper writing effectual as a "will"

N C.—In re Taylor's Will, 17 SE 2d 654, 220 NC 524

(2) To validate will, there must be concurrence of "animus testandi" and "animus signandi", that is, of intention to make will and intention to sign instrument as and for a will

Intent to make similar disposition

For instrument to constitute will, animus testandi must exist when it is executed or acknowledged and apply to particular instrument produced, as will, and paper is not established as deceased's will merely by proof that he intended to make disposition of his property similar to or even identically same as that in such paper

held that although not originally intended as a will, a paper or document may be made such afterwards, by adoption.<sup>4</sup> The intention must continue to the time of death.<sup>5</sup>

The animus testandi does not depend on the maker's knowledge or realization that he is making a will,<sup>6</sup> or on his designation of the instrument as a will,<sup>7</sup> or on the time, place, and circumstances of its execution,<sup>8</sup> but on his intention to create a revocable disposition of his property to take effect at his death.<sup>9</sup> The intention should be plainly apparent,<sup>10</sup> but effect must be given to it if it can be discovered,<sup>11</sup> and in arriving at such intention the court is not limited to an examination of the document itself, but may consider the surrounding circumstances.<sup>12</sup> So far as concerns the

The designation of an instrument purporting to be a will as a "copy" is not alone sufficient to establish that the decedent lacked testamentary intent in executing the instrument, as "copy" implies that instrument so labeled is identical with another instrument and if it is properly executed, the copy of a will is in effect the same as a duplicate which may be admitted to probate

Where testamentary intent is clearly deducible from writing itself and the writing meets other formalities required for a will, there is a presumption of testamentary intent requirement of animus testandi, it is immaterial whether an instrument was intended by the maker as a new will or as a republication of a prior will.<sup>13</sup> A will is not invalid for want of testamentary intent because the testator intends at the time of execution to make changes therein or to execute another will.<sup>14</sup>

No particular form of words is necessary to show a testamentary intent,<sup>15</sup> and there is no definite, fixed rule by which the presence or absence of testamentary intent may be determined,<sup>16</sup> but each case must stand on its own peculiar facts and cir-

guage of a writing may establish it to be a will, and the use of such terms as "devise," "leave," or "will" is highly persuasive of the writer's intent that that paper shall operate as a will <sup>21</sup>

An instrument in form of a will is not a will where it is executed under compulsion,<sup>22</sup> or merely as part of a ceremonial,<sup>23</sup> or for purposes of deception,<sup>24</sup> or for the purpose of perpetrating a jest <sup>25</sup>

§ 130. Knowledge of Testator of Contents of Will

Knowledge of testator as to the contents of his will, at the time of its execution, is essential to the validity of the will

It is indispensable to the validity of a will that the testator should know its contents<sup>26</sup> at the time of its execution,<sup>27</sup> knowledge after execution being insufficient <sup>28</sup> However, as discussed infra § 384, knowledge will ordinarily be presumed from the execution of the instrument, although the presumption is only a prima facie one and may be rebutted Where a will written in the presence of testator according to his dictation is executed according to the statute, it may be valid although not read to, or by, him, as discussed infra § 178, but if it appears

affirmatively that testator did not read the will and that it was not read to him, it must be shown that the contents were in some way known to him <sup>29</sup>

Sufficiency of knowledge or understanding If the testator knows and understands what the actual contents of the will are, this will be sufficient, although he may have had some erroneous opinions with respect to their legal effect and operation,<sup>30</sup> and if he understands the effect of the instrument as a whole it is not material that he did not understand the meaning of all the technical terms used therein <sup>31</sup>

Testator unable to read will through blindness, illiteracy, or other infirmity In order to give validity to the will of a person who is illiterate,<sup>32</sup> blind,<sup>33</sup> or subject to other infirmities,<sup>34</sup> it is indispensable that he should know the contents of the will Nevertheless the reading of the will to him,<sup>35</sup> or the reading of the will to him in the presence of attesting witnesses,<sup>36</sup> is not necessary where he is shown to have knowledge of its contents<sup>37</sup> and the execution of the will raises a presumption that the testator was aware of its contents <sup>38</sup>

ed in a language unknown to testator is valid where, notwithstanding this fact, it appears that he knew its contents,<sup>40</sup> but otherwise it is void.<sup>41</sup> It has been held that the court must be clearly convinced from the evidence that testator was fully and accurately advised as to the contents of the will, and that it sets forth his testamentary intentions by disposing of his property as he desired.<sup>42</sup>

§ 131. Disposition of Property

The essence of a will is a disposition of property, and ordinarily an instrument which disposes of no property is not valid as a will.

The essence of a will, by its very definition, is a disposition of property,<sup>43</sup> and an instrument which disposes of no property is not valid as a will, even though it is so designated by the maker,<sup>44</sup> unless it appoints an executor or guardian, as considered infra § 134, or unless it revokes a prior will, or revives a will previously revoked, discussed infra § 135. As otherwise expressed, a will, in order to be valid, must either provide for the disposition of property after death, or nominate an executor, and while it may do both, it is sufficient if it does either.<sup>45</sup> It is no objection, however, to the validity of a will that it disposes of a part only of the testator's property,<sup>46</sup> or disposes of income without disposing of principal,<sup>47</sup> or fails to dispose of a remainder or reversion after the termination of a prior particular estate,<sup>48</sup> or that it contains no residuary clause,<sup>49</sup> even though the testator intended and believed that his entire property was being disposed of.<sup>50</sup> The intention of the testator to give property must appear from the face of a will, and parol evidence cannot be resorted to for the purpose of supplying such intention.<sup>51</sup> The fact that there are nontestamentary provisions along with testamentary provisions in an instrument does not render it inoperative as a will.<sup>52</sup>

Will directing distribution of property under the law, or statutes of descent and distribution, is testamentary in character, and valid as a will where properly executed.<sup>53</sup>

§ 132 — Manner of Disposition; Unjust and Unnatural Dispositions

A testator of sound mind has absolute dominion over the disposition of his property by will, and authority to dispose of it as he sees fit, provided he does not violate the law or public policy, and a will is not rendered invalid by the mere fact that the disposition of property made thereby is unnatural, unreasonable, or unjust, or appears so to the court or to others.

It is a general rule that a testator of sound mind has, in making his will, absolute dominion over the disposition of his property, and authority to dispose

curate or untrue statement of his reason <sup>59</sup>

Therefore, a will is not rendered invalid by the mere fact that the disposition of property made thereby is unnatural, unreasonable, or unjust, or appears so to the court or to others,<sup>60</sup> or is not in conformity with the statute of descent or distributions,<sup>61</sup> and nothing in the law prevents a testator from making a will as eccentric, injudicious, or unjust as caprice, frivolity, revenge, or the like, may dictate <sup>62</sup> However, the unjust or unnatural character of a scheme of distribution may be evidence tending to show that fraud or undue influence was practised on the testator, as discussed infra § 255, or a lack on his part of testamentary capacity, supra §§ 44, 62

In accordance with the foregoing rules, the testator, by will, may make an unequal distribution or division among heirs or relatives,<sup>63</sup> provide for

An instrument in testamentary form, which merely revokes a prior will,<sup>89</sup> or which merely declares the maker's intention or wish that a certain prior will, which has been revoked, shall be deemed his will,<sup>90</sup> is valid as a will, although it does not in terms dispose of any property.

§ 136. Will Distinguished from Other Instruments

Whether a particular instrument disposing of property is a will or an instrument of another kind is to be determined by the disposition made by the instrument, that is, whether it is not to take effect until the death of the maker, and is revocable until that occurs

The question whether a particular instrument disposing of property is a will or an instrument of another kind is to be determined by the disposition made by the instrument, that is, whether it is a disposition of property not to take effect until the death of the maker, and is revocable until that occurs.<sup>91</sup> As a general rule, the question is to be determined in accordance with the manifested intention of the maker of the instrument,<sup>92</sup> but it has been held that the intention of the maker, while important, is not conclusive.<sup>93</sup> While they are factors to be considered, neither the form of the instrument,<sup>94</sup> the presence or absence of expressions therein declaratory of testamentary character,<sup>95</sup> or of words apt to testamentary dispositions,<sup>96</sup> nor the name applied to it by the person executing it, or his belief as to its character,<sup>97</sup> nor the fact that the paper is or is not under seal,<sup>98</sup> is conclusive as to whether or not an instrument is testamentary. So, whatever its form, and even though it appears on its face to have been made in pursuance of a previous promise, compact or obligation, or recites a consideration for its making,<sup>99</sup> an instrument which passes no present interest and is to become effective at the death of the maker is testamentary in character and is operative, if at all, as a will.<sup>1</sup> For an instrument which is testamentary in character to be effective as a will, it must be executed in accordance with the statute of wills and must meet the other requisites of a valid will.<sup>2</sup>

On the other hand, an instrument which creates or passes a present interest or obligation,<sup>3</sup> or which is not dependent on the death of the maker for its consummation or effectiveness,<sup>4</sup> is not a will, even though enjoyment of such interest is postponed until the death of the maker,<sup>5</sup> or is contingent on the survivorship of the donee.<sup>6</sup> If the owner of property can find a means of disposing of it inter vivos

which renders a will unnecessary for his practical purposes, he has a right to employ it,<sup>7</sup> and the fact that the motive of the transfer is to obtain the practical advantages of a will without making one is immaterial.<sup>8</sup> An instrument which is not ambulatory and revocable cannot be a will.<sup>9</sup>

Where the apparent character of an instrument is, or is not, that of a will, it should not be otherwise construed, unless its provisions, when harmonized if possible, are wholly inconsistent with its apparent character.<sup>10</sup> Subject to this rule, it has been held that the courts will, wherever possible, construe an instrument to be a will, rather than a disposition of another character,<sup>11</sup> and, when it cannot be supported as such, will construe it to be a deed or some other valid transfer of property.<sup>12</sup>

§ 137. — Deeds

Whether an instrument is a deed or will depends on whether it passes a present interest or takes effect only on the death of the maker, and is ambulatory and revocable until that time, an instrument in the form of a deed is testamentary in character where it is not to become operative until the maker's death.

The essential difference between a deed and a will is that a deed passes a present interest, even though the possession or enjoyment thereof may be postponed, while a will passes no present interest at the time of its execution, but takes effect only on the death of the testator, and until such time is ambulatory and revocable.<sup>13</sup> In determining whether a present interest is or is not passed, or attempted to be passed, by an instrument, and whether it is, accordingly, a deed or a will, the manifest intention of the maker is controlling,<sup>14</sup> but, as has been pointed out, there is no definite and uniform test by which the character of a particular instrument can be determined.<sup>15</sup> The form and language of the instrument,<sup>16</sup> the name applied to it by the maker,<sup>17</sup> and his belief as to its nature and character,<sup>18</sup> while proper to be considered, and entitled to some weight, are not conclusive.

As a general rule, an instrument, even though partly or wholly in the form of a deed, which is not to become operative until the maker's death, is not a deed, but is of testamentary character.<sup>19</sup>

Whether such an instrument is effective as a will depends on whether it was executed in conformity with the statutory requirements relating to the execution of wills and meets the other requisites of a will<sup>20</sup> An instrument which is not testamentary in form or substance will not be treated as a will in the absence of collateral evidence to show that it was intended as such<sup>21</sup> An instrument in the form of a will is not to be treated as a deed

Delivery of an instrument in the form of, and otherwise sufficient as, a deed ordinarily makes it operative as such, and not as a will,<sup>40</sup> unless the delivery is conditioned on the grantee surviving the grantor<sup>41</sup>. ment in the form of a deed which is not delivered until the grantor's death is not an effective deed and is operative, if at all, as a will<sup>47</sup> Subject to the statutory requirements as to the form of execution, an undelivered deed may be given effect as a will,<sup>48</sup> but not, it has been held, where there is no proof of an intention that it should operate as such,<sup>49</sup> or where it was designed and intended by the maker to operate only as a deed<sup>50</sup> The fact that an instrument is void as a deed does not transmute it into a will<sup>51</sup> An instrument is inoperative as either a will or a deed, where it is invalid as a will because not executed in compliance with statute, and as a deed because not delivered or not passing a present interest<sup>52</sup>

An instrument is to be construed as a whole in determining if it is a will or a deed<sup>53</sup> Where an instrument can have no operation as a deed, but may have as a will, or vice versa, it is the policy of the courts in doubtful cases so to construe it as to make it operative rather than inoperative,<sup>54</sup> but this rule can have no application where the instrument was clearly intended by the maker to be a deed, or a will, as the case may be<sup>55</sup> It has been said that where an instrument indicates on its face that it was drawn by an unskilled person, greater latitude in construction, as to whether it is a deed or a will, is proper than in the case of an instrument drawn by an experienced hand<sup>56</sup>

Instrument must be construed as of time of execution, in determining whether it is a will or a deed,<sup>57</sup> and where made and executed with intention that it shall be one or the other, its character cannot be changed by a subsequent writing or agreement<sup>58</sup>

to benefit.<sup>59</sup> nor is a mortgage providing for the payment of interest during the mortgagee's lifetime, and that it shall become void at his death, the principal remaining the property of the mortgagor and his heirs, therefore to be deemed of testamentary character.<sup>60</sup> A gift of a mortgage on the grantor's property is not rendered testamentary by the fact that no interest is to be paid during the grantor's lifetime.<sup>61</sup> However, a provision, in a mortgage that specified sums shall be paid to designated third persons, strangers to the mortgage transaction, after the death of the mortgagee, has been regarded as testamentary.<sup>62</sup> An assignment of a mortgage which is intended to take effect only on death is a testamentary disposition which is ineffective unless the instrument contains the requisites of a will.<sup>63</sup>

§ 139. — Leases

Whether an instrument is a will or a lease depends on the effect and operation of the instrument, to be determined from its terms

Whether an instrument is a will or a lease depends on the effect and operation of the instrument, to be determined from its terms.<sup>64</sup> An instrument in the form of a lease which is not actually delivered and does not take effect until the lessor's death is a testamentary disposition.<sup>65</sup> A lease taking effect from and after its date is not a will.<sup>66</sup> A lease is not converted into a will, where it is not executed with the formalities necessary to the execution of a will, by a provision in it attempting to dispose of the reversion,<sup>67</sup> or the rents accruing after the death of the lessor,<sup>68</sup> or by a provision giving the lessee an option to purchase the demised premises after the lessor's death.<sup>69</sup> While the lease may be valid as such, an ambulatory provision therein providing for the transfer of the fee on the lessor's death is testamentary and is valid, if at all, as a will.<sup>70</sup>

§ 140. — Contracts

As a general rule, the fact that the death of a party determines the time for performance of a contract does not of itself make the contract testamentary, and an otherwise sufficient contract is not rendered testamentary by the fact that it provides for the passing of title to property at death or payment at death.

Although a contract and a will are essentially unlike, in that the former is an agreement between parties for the doing or not doing of some particular thing and derives its binding force from the meeting of the minds of the parties, and the latter is a unilateral disposition of property acquiring binding force only at the death of the testator and then from the fact that it is his last expressed purpose,<sup>71</sup> and a will, although absolute and unconditional, cannot be termed a contract.<sup>72</sup>

Other statements of distinction

(1) A "will" is dispositive whereas a "contract" is promissory, a will is gratuitous whereas a contract requires consideration, ordinarily, a will is revocable, but usually a contract is irrevocable, a will is inoperative unless it is made in accordance with statute regulating execution of wills, and as a general rule it has no legal effect until probated, whereas such principles do not govern contracts

La.—Succession of Lanata, 18 So 2d 500, 205 La 915

(2) A contract creates a present, enforceable and binding right over which promisor has no control without consent of promisee, while a testamentary disposition operates prospectively

(3) An instrument testamentary in character is distinguished from one containing an enforceable contractual obligation by the ambulatory character of an instrument permitting change or revocation before death

Ohio.—Duemer v Duemer, 88 N.E. 2d 603, 86 Ohio App 192

(4) The words "testamentary disposition" connote or denote a gift rather than a contract

N.J.—Elsenhardt v Schmidt, 98 A 2d 698, 27 N.J. Super 76

(5) The essential distinction between a contractual obligation and a "testamentary disposition" is that the "contract" contemplates performance, in part at least, during the lifetime and vests some quantum of present interest in the other party

their characteristics are sometimes combined to some extent in one instrument, so that an instrument purporting to be a contract may have a testamentary character,<sup>73</sup> or an instrument in form of a will may be an irrevocable agreement,<sup>74</sup> and, on the other hand, an instrument properly executed and intended as a will may operate as such although it contains contractual features,<sup>75</sup> and an instrument executed and intended as a contract may operate as such although it contains provisions of a testamentary nature<sup>76</sup>

In determining whether an instrument is a contract or a will, the dominant purpose of the maker as manifested therein must control<sup>77</sup> So the question whether any given writing is a will or a contract must be determined by the character of its contents, rather than by its title or any formal words with which it may begin or conclude,<sup>78</sup> but words which do not change the legal effect of the instrument may nevertheless be significant in determining its character and the intention with which it was made<sup>79</sup> All of the provisions of the instrument and the pertinent facts are to be considered in determining whether a writing is a contract or a will<sup>80</sup> An instrument which meets the requirements for a will is not to be construed as a contract, ineffective for lack of consideration<sup>81</sup>

Although an agreement involves or effectuates a disposition of property belonging to a party thereto, it is valid as a contract, and is not a will, where it contemplates performance, in part at least, during his lifetime, or vests a present interest in the other party,<sup>82</sup> as in the case of an antenuptial contract,<sup>83</sup> or a contract to convey,<sup>84</sup> or an option contract,<sup>85</sup> or a contract to devise or bequeath,<sup>86</sup> and a contract creating a present obligation is not

Contract for benefit of third party

In determining whether a contract for the benefit of a third person, is in substance an informal "will," and unenforceable, the test is whether the contract confers a fixed right on the beneficiary when the contract is made, or whether it is to have no effect until the death of the maker

testamentary merely because the obligation is to be performed, wholly or in part, after the obligor's death<sup>87</sup>

The fact that the death of one of the parties to a contract determines the time of performance does not of itself make the contract testamentary<sup>88</sup> Thus, an otherwise sufficient contract is not rendered testamentary by the fact that it provides that title to property is to pass at death<sup>89</sup> or that payment is to be made at death, and by the maker's estate or representative<sup>90</sup> The statute of wills does not prevent the owner of property from providing by contract for the disposition of his property on his death,<sup>91</sup> and there is nothing in the statute of wills which prevents the creation by contract of a bona fide equitable interest in property and its enforcement after the death of the contracting party, even though the date of death is agreed on as the time for the transfer of legal title<sup>92</sup>

An instrument, although partly or wholly in the form of a contract, is testamentary in character, and operative, if at all, as a will, where it is to have no operation during the party's lifetime, and disposes or attempts to dispose of his property at his death, and not before,<sup>93</sup> as where it provides that property belonging to one party shall go to or belong to another after the former's death<sup>94</sup> A contract which is testamentary in character is not effective as a will unless it meets the requisites of a will with respect to manner of execution, etc<sup>95</sup> An instrument which is in substance a joint, mutual, and reciprocal will, but is ineffective as such because not executed in compliance with the statute of wills cannot be given effect as a contract<sup>96</sup>

Applying these rules, it has been held by some authorities that an agreement as to the disposition of partnership assets in case of the death of a partner is of a testamentary character,<sup>97</sup> and by other

§ 141. — Bills and Notes

The fact that a bill or note is payable at the maker's death does not make it testamentary, as long as it creates or recognizes a present obligation, only the payment or discharge of which is postponed

The fact that a bill or note is by its terms payable at or after the death of the maker, does not give it a testamentary character, as long as it creates or recognizes a present indebtedness or obligation, only the payment or discharge of which is postponed,<sup>8</sup> even though it is executed at the same time as a will,<sup>9</sup> or the maker, after delivering it, has and retains possession of the note during his lifetime,<sup>10</sup> or delivery is to a third person<sup>11</sup> Where, however, an instrument, although in form a bill or note, is intended to have no operation until the death of the maker, it is not contractual, but of the nature of a will,<sup>12</sup> so a check made payable, after the maker's death, and consequently not collectable until that time,<sup>13</sup> or an instrument merely directing the maker's executor or administrator to pay a sum of money to a designated person,<sup>14</sup> is testamentary and inoperative unless executed in accordance with the statute of wills, and otherwise satisfying the requisites of a will<sup>15</sup> Similarly, a paper giving a bank directions as to the disposition of a depositor's account on his death is testamentary in character<sup>16</sup> A fortiori, an instrument containing no unconditional promise or order to pay,

but merely expressing the maker's desire that at his death a designated person shall have a specified sum out of his estate, is not a bill or note, but a testamentary instrument<sup>17</sup> Where the indorsement and transfer of a note is intended to take effect only at death, the transfer is of a testamentary character and is ineffective unless it meets the requisites of a will<sup>18</sup>

§ 142. — Bonds

A bond for the payment of a sum of money is not testamentary because payment is to be made on or after the maker's death

Like a promissory note, a bond, presently effective, for the payment of a sum of money is not testamentary in character because payment is to be made at or after the obligor's death<sup>19</sup> In determining whether an instrument was intended by the maker as a bond or a will, the court will consider language contained therein which would be immaterial in construing the instrument after its character had been established<sup>20</sup>

Government bonds Where government bonds are registered in accordance with federal regulations in the name of the owner, with provision for payment on his death to another, the registration in favor of the beneficiary is not a testamentary disposition, or one simply for the protection of the United States, but vests a present interest in the beneficiary even though the owner retains the right to destroy that interest by redeeming the bond during his lifetime<sup>21</sup>

§ 143. — Declarations or Deeds of Trust

An instrument purporting to create an inter vivos trust is testamentary where the instrument is not to take effect until the settlor's death and does not pass any present interest to the beneficiaries, or where the settlor retains such interests and powers with respect to the trust property as amount to full ownership and control of the property for his lifetime

The primary distinction between wills and declarations or deeds of trust is that the former take effect in the future on the death of the testator, while the latter take effect in præsenti during the lifetime of the settlor,<sup>22</sup> and, as in the case of deeds generally, the question whether a particular instrument is a will or is a declaration or deed of trust depends on the manifest intention of the maker<sup>23</sup>

declaration or deed of trust, but which is not intended to take effect until the death of the maker, and which does not pass any interest to a beneficiary during the settlor's lifetime is testamentary in character, and operative, if at all, only as a will.<sup>24</sup> In order that an instrument create a testamentary trust, it must meet all the requisites of a will, including the requirements as to manner of execution,<sup>25</sup> and an instrument purporting to create an inter vivos trust may be given effect as a will where it meets such requirements<sup>26</sup>

An instrument which conveys the legal title on trust, or sufficiently declares a trust, to take effect during the lifetime of the settlor will be construed to create a trust inter vivos, and not to be testamentary where the instrument passes a present interest to the beneficiaries of the trust<sup>27</sup> although

An instrument conferring a power which is not intended to have any effect until the death of the donor is testamentary in character

An instrument, creating and conferring a power, which is not intended to have any effect until the death of the donor, as distinguished from an instrument presently creating a power although providing for its exercise only after the donor's death, is testamentary in character, and inoperative unless executed in accordance with the statutes relating to wills<sup>49</sup>. An instrument directing a designated person to realize, out of property belonging to the maker of the instrument, a specified sum of money and to pay over or disburse it in a particular manner is a will, and not a mere power of sale or disposition, where it manifests an intention that, subject to such payments or disbursements, the maker's property shall pass and belong to such person at the former's death<sup>50</sup>. The exercise by will of a power to appoint the beneficiaries of an inter vivos trust does not give a testamentary character to the disposition of the trust fund<sup>51</sup>. It has been held that a contract with respect to the exercise of a power to appoint by will is testamentary in character<sup>52</sup>

§ 145. — Assignments

An assignment is not rendered testamentary by the fact that its subject matter is such that the assignee will not realize the full benefit of the assignment until the death of the assignor

An assignment which passes a present interest is not rendered testamentary by the fact that its subject matter, as in the case of a policy of life insurance, or the terms or conditions on which it is made, are such that the assignee will not realize the full benefit of the assignment until the death of the assignor<sup>53</sup> Thus, the assignment of a mortgage, with a reservation of the interest for the assignor's lifetime is not testamentary<sup>54</sup> An assignment of so much of the principal of a note as was unpaid at the assignor's death is a present transfer and not a testamentary one<sup>55</sup> Where an assignment passes no present interest, but only an interest to take effect at the assignor's death, it is testamentary in character, and inoperative where not executed in accordance with the statutes governing testamentary dispositions<sup>56</sup> Thus, an instrument disposing or attempting to dispose of a bond or note, or its proceeds, after the death of the person executing such instrument is testamentary in nature, and cannot be given effect unless properly executed as a will<sup>57</sup> An assignment of the interest which the assignor may receive as heir, legatee, or devisee of another may be a presently operative transfer and not a testamentary disposition,<sup>58</sup> the test is whether the assignment is presently operative or is merely ambulatory and revocable until the death of the assignor<sup>59</sup>

§ 146 — Bills of Sale

An instrument which passes a present interest in personal property is a bill of sale rather than a will, even though such interest is not to take effect in possession or enjoyment until the death of the seller

The essential difference between a will and a bill of sale is that the former takes effect only at the death of the maker, while the latter must take effect on its execution or not at all<sup>60</sup> As in the case of a deed, the intention of the maker of an instrument, as manifested therein, must govern in determining whether it is a will or a bill of sale<sup>61</sup> An instrument which passes or is in form sufficient to pass a present interest in personal property is a bill of sale, rather than a will, even though such interest is not to take effect in possession or enjoyment until the death of the vendor,<sup>62</sup> and a want of delivery, preventing the instrument from being effective as a bill of sale, does not allow it to operate as a will<sup>63</sup> Where, however, an instrument, although partly or wholly in the form of a bill of sale, passes no present interest or title and is intended to take effect only at the death of the vendor, it is testamentary, and ineffective unless properly executed as a will.<sup>64</sup>

§ 147 — Gifts

If a purported gift does not take effect as an executed and completed transfer to the donee, either legally or equitably, during the life of the donor, it is a testamentary disposition, good only when made by a valid will

Although possessing some characteristics in common, wills and gifts are distinguishable in that under a will no title or interest passes to the donee or beneficiary until the death of the testator, while the title passes immediately and irrevocably in the case of a gift inter vivos<sup>65</sup> Whether a transaction is a gift or is testamentary in character depends on the intention of the donor<sup>66</sup> Where a gift is made effective in the lifetime of the decedent and he has divested himself of all power to recall it, such transaction is a gift inter vivos, and not testamentary in its nature,<sup>67</sup> even though a life interest is reserved to the maker or the enjoyment of the gift is postponed until his death<sup>68</sup>

If the gift does not take effect as an executed and completed transfer to the donee, either legally or equitably, during the life of the donor, it is a testamentary disposition, good only when made by a valid will<sup>69</sup> A transaction ineffective as a gift because not completed or because of lack of delivery cannot be given effect as a will unless it meets all of the requisites of a will<sup>70</sup> An instrument, otherwise effective as a will, is not to be denied probate merely because it contains some language indicating an intention to make a present transfer<sup>71</sup> A writing amounting merely to an expression of intention to make a gift inter vivos is not to be treated as testamentary merely because such intention is not carried out in the lifetime of the maker,<sup>72</sup> and, on the other hand, a provision in an instrument in the form of a will expressing the maker's desire, that the beneficiary take care of him

during his lifetime does not make the disposition a gift inter vivos<sup>73</sup> The fact that an instrument of gift is also sufficient as a will does not prevent it from operating as the former.<sup>74</sup>

The nature of a gift causa mortis as a testamentary transaction is discussed in Gifts §§ 72, 73 A gift causa mortis is distinguished from a legacy infra § 1125

Indorsement of credit on bill or note An indorsement, by way of gift, of a credit on a bill or note is not testamentary, or invalid because not complying with the statutes relating to the execution of wills, where it is intended to take effect at the time the indorsement or entry is made,<sup>75</sup> but it is testamentary where it is to take effect only on the death of the person making the indorsement or entry<sup>76</sup> Thus, a direction that the amount of the credit shall be charged to the maker of the note as an advancement renders the indorsement testamentary, since it indicates an intention to make a dis-

§ 148. — Other Instruments

Provisions as to the disposition of the proceeds of a life insurance policy are ordinarily not regarded as testamentary

The designation of a beneficiary or a change in beneficiary of life insurance or the like is not a testamentary disposition of property, and not within the statute of wills,<sup>79</sup> particularly as during the lifetime of the insured there is no specific property owned by him or to which he is entitled, and instead of the designation of the beneficiary being a disposition of property, it is the mere naming of a person for whose benefit a contract is made<sup>80</sup> A contract whereby one agrees to name another as beneficiary of his life insurance policy is not a testamentary transaction<sup>81</sup> An agreement by the beneficiary of a policy with the owner to pay part of the proceeds of the policy to another is not testamentary<sup>82</sup>

Where it is agreed between the insurer and the beneficiary that the insurer shall retain the proceeds of the policy subject to the demand of the beneficiary, and in the interim, pay the interest or income to the beneficiary, a provision as to the disposition of the fund on the beneficiary's death is not testamentary<sup>83</sup> and is valid and enforceable although not made in compliance with the statute of wills<sup>84</sup> An annuity policy providing for payment of income to insured for life and payment of principal to designated beneficiary on death is not a testamentary disposition,<sup>85</sup> even though the insured retains the right to change the beneficiary or to cash in the policy<sup>86</sup>

Joint tenancy, joint bank account Ordinarily, the creation of a joint tenancy between one who is the sole owner and another is not a testamentary transfer<sup>87</sup> Where a husband transfers property to himself and his wife in joint tenancy with the understanding that the wife is to have no interest in the property until she survives him, the transfer is testamentary,<sup>88</sup> but where the intention is to make a present gift of a joint interest, the transfer is not testamentary even though the husband is to retain sole control of the property until his death<sup>89</sup> The creation of a joint bank account by one person for himself and another, as joint owners, with right of survivorship, is not a will, and not subject to the statutes relating to the execution of wills, where the other joint owner's interest in, or title to, the account arises or vests immediately,<sup>90</sup> but the rule is otherwise if full domin-

Joint account made in consideration of promise to maintain

(1) Instrument by which decedent had during his lifetime declared his savings account on deposit with building association to be thereafter a joint account in names of himself

ion over the account is retained by the depositor during his life, and the benefit to the other person is intended to arise only at the former's death,<sup>91</sup> even though in the meantime such other person is authorized, as the depositor's agent, to make withdrawals from the account<sup>92</sup>

A transfer of a bank deposit which is not to take effect until the death of the transferer is testamentary in character and is ineffective unless it meets the requisites of a will<sup>93</sup>

§ 149. — Evidence as to Character of Instrument

Where the character of the instrument is doubtful, extrinsic evidence of the circumstances surrounding its making is admissible to aid in determining whether the instrument is testamentary or of an inter vivos nature

In determining whether an instrument is of a testamentary character, its contents may be examined,<sup>95</sup> and the question whether the writing was intended by the maker to be his will or to be an instrument of some other character should, if possible, be determined from the face of the instrument<sup>96</sup> The presumption is against the testamentary character of an instrument neither signed nor written by the deceased<sup>97</sup> Where the character of the instrument is doubtful, or its nature is uncertain, extrinsic evidence of the circumstances surrounding its making is admissible to aid in determining the question,<sup>98</sup> but where a writing is on its face an instrument of nontestamentary character, and is not ambiguous or equivocal in form, parol evidence is not admissible to show that it was intended to be a will,<sup>99</sup> and, similarly, it has been held that where and his sister, in absence of execution in conformity with statute of wills, could not operate as valid bequest of account to decedent's sister

(2) Agreement whereby deceased placed his savings deposit in a joint account payable to himself and another who, in consideration of deposit, agreed to care for deceased until his death and which deposit, by agreement, was made payable to either party or the survivor, was held to constitute a valid transfer of deposit by deceased to other joint depositor as against contention that agreement was invalid because of intent to make a testamentary disposal of property without complying with conditions of statute of wills

A paper, stating that, in case of signer's death without having made a will, he wished that money derived from certain gas wells, in which he owned fractional interest, be paid to named person, was "testamentary" in character, though in form of letter addressed to trustee for collection and distribution of proceeds of sale of gas produced from such wells an instrument purporting to be a will is fair and regular on its face, and properly executed as a will, parol evidence is ordinarily inadmissible to show that it was not intended as such,<sup>1</sup> although on this point there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>2</sup>

Where extrinsic evidence is admissible, the general rules of evidence govern as to what evidence is admissible.<sup>3</sup> A preamble written on the same sheet with a doubtful or ambiguous instrument must be read as a part of it, in determining its character.<sup>4</sup> In determining whether an instrument is a will or a marriage settlement the fact that the maker's wife acquiesced therein is immaterial.<sup>5</sup>

The execution of an instrument contemporaneously with the execution of a will is evidence that the instrument was not executed with testamentary intent.<sup>6</sup> It has been said that where an instrument is imperfect and equivocal in form, the presumption is against its operating as a will.<sup>7</sup>

Weight and sufficiency In particular cases the evidence has been held to show an instrument to be of testamentary nature, or to have been intended to operate as a will,<sup>8</sup> or to be an instrument of a different character,<sup>9</sup> as a deed,<sup>10</sup> a declaration of trust,<sup>11</sup> a contract,<sup>12</sup> a promissory note,<sup>13</sup> or a gift.<sup>14</sup>

Failure to employ dispositive words is not of itself sufficient to compel conclusion that instrument is of such a nontestamentary character that parol evidence may not be introduced to show its true character:

§ 150. What Law Governs

- a As between laws of different jurisdictions
- b As between laws in force at time of execution and time of testator's death

a. As between Laws of Different Jurisdictions

In the absence of an expressed intent or a statute to the contrary, the validity of a will with respect to personality is governed by the law of the testator's last domicile, and with respect to realty, by the law of the place where the realty is situate, the place of execution being without legal significance or effect

In the absence of an expressed intent<sup>15</sup> or a statute otherwise providing, the validity of a will with respect to personal property, wherever situate is governed by the law of the testator's last domicile,<sup>16</sup> rather than by the law of the state where the residuary legatees are domiciled or have their situs,<sup>17</sup> whether in trust or otherwise<sup>18</sup> It has been held that the law of the testator's domicile at the time of his death not only decides the course of distribution or succession as to personalty, but regulates the decision as to what constitutes the last will, without regard to the place either of birth, or death, or the situation of the property at that time<sup>19</sup> With respect to disposition of realty, the validity of the will is governed by the law of the place where the realty is situate,<sup>20</sup> whether in trust or other-

wis<sup>21</sup> and such law also determines whether the property shall be regarded as real or personal<sup>22</sup> The place of execution of a will devising realty is without legal significance or effect<sup>23</sup>

This rule, where it has been left unchanged, or has been declared or confirmed, by statute, renders invalid as to real property a will which is not executed in conformity with the law of the place where such realty is situate, even though it is executed in accordance with the law of the testator's domicile or of the place of execution<sup>24</sup> On the other hand, this rule renders valid as to personal property a will which conforms to the law of the testator's last domicile, even though it would be insufficient if judged by the law of the state or country in which it was executed,<sup>25</sup> or where the personalty is actually situate,<sup>26</sup> except that effect will not be given in such another state or country to provisions which are contrary to its public policy<sup>27</sup> A will, however, which is executed in the manner prescribed by the laws of a state is valid as to property therein, whether or not its execution conforms to the law of the place where it was executed or of the testator's domicile<sup>28</sup> Where a statute has been enacted allowing wills executed in a foreign state or country to take effect or be probated if they are valid under the laws of such foreign state or country, or have been probated there, the validity of a will is to be tested by the law of the place of execution, as to property within the state in which the statute is in force, even though the will was not executed in conformity with the law of such state<sup>29</sup>

domicile,<sup>31</sup> proof of execution is referable to the statutes of the place of probate<sup>32</sup> Where the laws of a particular jurisdiction are inapplicable for the purpose of determining the validity of a testamentary disposition, they are of no effect in the determination, in the absence of a clear or explicit declaration or election in the will that such laws apply<sup>33</sup>

With respect to a testamentary trust, the law of the situs of the corpus applies if the trust is to be held there, but if the trustees are to be foreign, the foreign law will apply<sup>34</sup> The fact that provisions of testamentary trusts of personalty to be held and administered in another state, where such trust is valid, are contrary to the general policy of testator's domicile, is usually unimportant in determining the validity of the gift and the conditions imposed, the question of state policy in such cases being ordinarily only a matter of legitimate interest in the jurisdiction in which the trust is to be held and administered.<sup>35</sup>

Execution in different jurisdictions of more than one will A state and foreign state may both recognize intentions of a testator executing wills in each state, as far as legally expressed by him according to the laws thereof, if each state keeps within its jurisdiction and the principle of interstate comity<sup>36</sup>

b. As between Laws in Force at Time of Execution and Time of Testator's Death

The validity of a will depends on the law in force at the time of the death of the testator, but as to execution, there is a diversity of opinion as to the law to be applied where a change in the statutes governing the formalities to be observed has been made intermediate the execution of a will and the testator's death

It has been laid down as a general rule that the validity of a will depends on the law in force at the time of the death of the testator,<sup>37</sup> inasmuch as the will takes effect at that time, as is discussed supra § 128

With respect to execution, however, there is a diversity of opinion as to the law to be applied where a change in the statutes governing the formalities to be observed has been made intermediate the execution of a will and the testator's death<sup>38</sup> The rule prevailing in a number of jurisdictions is that the validity of the execution of a will is to be tested by the statutes in force at the time of its execution, and that statutes subsequently enacted have no retrospective effect,<sup>39</sup> except where they otherwise provide<sup>40</sup> According to other authorities, the statutes in force at the time of death of a testator are controlling as to the proper execution of his will, and a will not executed in conformity with such statutes is ineffective, although its execution was sufficient at the time it was made<sup>41</sup> A third, and broader, view, supported by some authority, is that statutes relating to the execution of wills, when they increase the necessary formalities to be observed, should not be so construed as to impair the validity of wills made prior to their enactment,<sup>42</sup> and, when they lessen the formalities, should be so construed as to aid wills defectively executed according to the law in force at the time of their making<sup>43</sup> Obviously, none of these rules has any application where the will is made after the enactment of a statute changing the mode of execution,<sup>44</sup> or where the death of the testator occurs prior to the adoption of such legislation<sup>45</sup>

§ 151. Partial Invalidity

b Where valid and invalid parts are separable

a. In General

Where the invalid part of a will is inseparable from the valid parts, the entire will is invalid

The question whether a will invalid in part is therefore invalid as a whole depends on whether the valid parts of the will are separable from those parts which are not valid<sup>46</sup> Where the several parts of a will are so intermingled and interdependent that the presumed wishes of the testator would be defeated if one portion were retained and another portion rejected, or if manifest injustice to beneficiaries would result from such construction, the will must fail altogether<sup>47</sup>

Test of separability is, in all cases, whether the upholding of one part and the rejection of another will defeat the presumed wishes of the testator for the disposal of his property, or work injustice among the beneficiaries<sup>48</sup> The mere fact that the testator intended by his will to dispose of his entire estate does not render the provisions of the will inseparable or interdependent<sup>49</sup>

If a will is valid as to some of its provisions and invalid as to others, and the valid provisions can be separated from the invalid, and upheld without doing injustice to any of the beneficiaries under the will, or defeating the general intent of the testator, the will must be sustained in so far as it is valid.

It is a rule of general application that if a will is valid as to some of its provisions and invalid as to others, and the valid provisions can be separated from the invalid, and upheld without doing injustice to any of the beneficiaries under the will, or defeating the general intent of the testator, the will must be sustained in so far as it is valid,<sup>50</sup> even though the invalid provisions relate to, or affect most or nearly all of, the estate,<sup>51</sup> except that otherwise valid provisions which are by their terms dependent on invalid provisions must fail with the latter<sup>52</sup>

So, under this rule, the disposing portions of a will may be void, and the provisions appointing an executor valid, or vice versa,<sup>53</sup> and the invalidity of a provision as to personality does not necessarily affect a provision as to realty, or vice versa<sup>54</sup> The rule has been applied where part of the will was invalid for uncertainty,<sup>55</sup> or rendered indeterminable and, therefore, unenforceable because of lack of continuity,<sup>56</sup> or where the greater portion of the testator's property passes under the intestate laws because of the incompleteness of the instrument,<sup>57</sup> or where it contained provisions void as against public policy,<sup>58</sup> or in violation of statutes prohibiting the manumission or emancipation of slaves,<sup>59</sup> or regulating testamentary disposition of property for charitable uses,<sup>60</sup> or provisions violating the rule against perpetuities,<sup>61</sup> or statutes restricting suspensions of absolute ownership or the power of alienation,<sup>62</sup> or provisions for an illegal accumulation of income.<sup>63</sup>

Likewise, the rule has been applied in cases where some of the provisions of the will were void for undue influence, as discussed infra § 236, or as attempting to exempt the testator's estate from liability for a legatee's debts,<sup>64</sup> or attempting to reserve the power to change the will without complying with statutory formalities,<sup>65</sup> or as assuming to appoint guardians for testator's minor children<sup>66</sup> or grandchildren,<sup>67</sup> or as naming a beneficiary incapable of taking by will,<sup>68</sup> or where, as to some of the gifts made by it, the will was not attested by the required number of witnesses.<sup>69</sup> It has been held, on similar principles, that where a will disposes of a greater amount of property for a designated object than is permitted by law,<sup>70</sup> or of more property than by law he is allowed to dispose of,<sup>71</sup> the will is valid except as to the excess.

§ 152. Contingent Wills

A contingent will is a will which is to take effect only on the happening of a specified contingency, and such a will is operative if the contingency happens, but its operation is defeated by a failure or nonoccurrence of the contingency.

A will may be drawn to take effect only on the happening of a specified contingency,<sup>72</sup> which is a condition precedent to the operation of the will,<sup>73</sup> and when so drawn a will is denominated a contingent, or conditional, will.<sup>74</sup> Such a will is operative if the contingency happens or occurs,<sup>75</sup> but its operation is defeated by failure or nonoccurrence of such contingency,<sup>76</sup> except where it is subsequently revived or republished by the testator.<sup>77</sup>

Whether a will is to be regarded as contingent turns on the point whether the contingency is referred to merely as the occasion of, or reason for, making the will at the time it is made, or is referred to as the reason for making the particular disposition of property which is provided for, and is intended to specify the condition on which the will is to become operative,<sup>78</sup> it being only in the latter case, where the disposition and the contingency are so related to each other that the one is dependent on the other, that the will is contingent.<sup>79</sup> The will must contain language which fairly indicates a purpose to limit its operation,<sup>80</sup> and that it was the intention of the testator to make a will which would operate only during a certain period or until a certain emergency has passed.<sup>81</sup> The condition must appear on the face of the will,<sup>82</sup> and parol evidence is not admissible to show that an instrument which in form is a general or absolute will was intended to take effect only on a contingency.<sup>83</sup> Parol evidence is admissible, however, to show that the testator's intention was to make an absolute and not a contingent will.<sup>84</sup> Evidence of the preservation of the document for a considerable time after the non-happening of the contingency, or the expiration of the time of impending calamity, is admissible to show that the testator regarded the contingency as relating to the motive inducing the making of the will, rather than as a condition to its becoming operative,<sup>85</sup> and such evidence has been held to raise a presumption that the will was intended to be absolute and noncontingent.<sup>86</sup>

Whether a will is conditional or unconditional is largely dependent on the factual situation presented,<sup>87</sup> and the test is, not what the testator may have meant, but meaning of his words considered in connection with surrounding conditions at the time of execution of the instrument.<sup>88</sup> The general rule is that mere matters of inducement, even though phrased conditionally, do not constitute a condition which requires the rejection of a will,<sup>89</sup> and that the language of a will should be held to be a mere inducement to testator's making a will and not a condition precedent to operation of the will, if that construction is fairly permissible.<sup>90</sup> Unless the terms of a will clearly show that it was intended to be contingent, it will be regarded as absolute and unconditional.<sup>91</sup>

A condition precedent to operation of a will should not be implied from indefinite language,<sup>92</sup> but must appear expressly or by necessary implication from the language of the will as a whole.<sup>93</sup> In particular, if the language used in a will can reasonably be construed to mean that the testator refers to a possible danger or threatened calamity only as a reason for making a will at the time, rather than as a condition precedent to the will becoming operative, such construction should prevail, and the will be construed as not conditional.<sup>94</sup>

Contingent will distinguished from will making conditional dispositions A contingent will, which does not become operative as a will if the contingency does not occur, is to be distinguished from an absolute will disposing of property subject to conditions or restrictions.<sup>95</sup> Conditions attached to a particular testamentary disposition of property, rather than to the operation of the instrument as a will, do not render it a contingent will,<sup>96</sup> even though the will contains but a single devise or bequest<sup>97</sup>

Soldiers' or mariners' wills Particularly in the case of those in military or naval service, who are liable to sudden peril and whose informal wills receive high favor at the hands of the courts, as discussed infra § 220, language expressive of special apprehension as inducement to making of will is not readily construed into a positive condition<sup>98</sup>

§ 153 Instructions for, and Preparation of, Will

A will is not invalidated by the fact that it is prepared or written by the testator, or is prepared by a person named in the will, or by one in a confidential relationship to the testator, or by the fact that the scrivener makes suggestions or gives information to the testator to aid in the preparation of the will

A will may validly be prepared or written by the testator himself<sup>99</sup> It is not invalid because prepared by the person named therein as executor,<sup>1</sup> or by a beneficiary,<sup>2</sup> or by a person in a confidential relationship to testator,<sup>3</sup> although this circumstance imposes on the court the duty of increased vigilance in seeing that the will was fairly executed and that it does in fact carry out the testator's wishes<sup>4</sup>

Similarly, a will is not invalidated by the fact that the scrivener makes suggestions or gives information to the testator to aid in the preparation of the will,<sup>5</sup> or that he suggests the order or arrangement of its provisions,<sup>6</sup> and where there is nothing to arouse suspicion, one who draws a will is under no duty to inquire as to the prospective testator's ownership<sup>7</sup> It is not even essential to the validity of a will that it be drawn up under instructions from the testator, if he adopts it understandingly as drawn,<sup>8</sup> but where it is so prepared by, or under instructions from, another, proof of understanding and adoption by the testator must be clear<sup>9</sup> Even though it is in violation of law for a probate judge,<sup>10</sup> or an unlicensed practitioner,<sup>11</sup> to draw a will, a will drawn by him is not void A will understandingly executed supercedes previous instructions<sup>12</sup>

§ 154 Statutory Requirements

Compliance with all statutory prerequisites is necessary to the validity of a will

Since, as discussed supra § 3, the making of a will is based on statute, it follows that compliance with all statutory prerequisites is necessary to the validity of a will<sup>13</sup>

B FORM AND CONTENTS

§ 155. In General

As a general rule, it is not necessary that any particular form or words be used in making a will, if there is a compliance with statutory requisites

Of all instruments a will is least governed by form,<sup>14</sup> and it need not necessarily be in the usual form of a will,<sup>15</sup> the form being unimportant except as indicating intent<sup>16</sup> Since good-faith wills should be upheld whenever possible,<sup>17</sup> they should not be set aside because of mere irregularities in form<sup>18</sup> As a general rule, it is not necessary that any particular form or words be used,<sup>19</sup> or that technical or legal language be used,<sup>20</sup> if the statutory

Name not controlling

tute such an instrument, all that is necessary is that it should clearly appear to be the intention of the party to have it operate after his death and not before<sup>26</sup> Any writing to take effect at death may constitute a will,<sup>27</sup> even though it does not contain an express statement that it was to take effect only after the maker's death<sup>28</sup> Words and phrases in a will which are not dispositive are not actual parts of the will,<sup>29</sup> but words or statements not essential to a will will not strip an instrument of its character as a will<sup>30</sup> A document may be a will notwithstanding it is written in incorrect English<sup>31</sup>

The declaration of the testator, in the beginning of the instrument offered for probate as his will, that it is his last will and testament, is not conclusive<sup>32</sup> While the courts will go far to give effect to written testamentary instruments, when such instruments come within the meaning of statutes relating to wills,<sup>33</sup> the words used by the decedent must be sufficient for the purpose,<sup>34</sup> since they have no authority to make a will for the decedent when he has not done so in his lifetime<sup>35</sup>

Memorandum or instructions A paper drawn up as a memorandum<sup>36</sup> or mere instructions or directions for the preparation of a will, without intent that the writing itself shall operate as a will,<sup>37</sup> do not amount to a will However, a testamentary paper drawn up in the form of instructions for a formal will may itself be a valid will if properly executed<sup>38</sup>

§ 156. Writing

A will must ordinarily be in writing

Except where nuncupative wills are permitted, a will must ordinarily be in writing,<sup>39</sup> statutes usually so providing<sup>40</sup> An oral will or any oral part of a

ferred for probate as a will is not controlling written will is inoperative as such.<sup>41</sup> A will cannot be made by having the intended executors or any one else promise the testator to carry out his wishes orally expressed.<sup>42</sup> An oral will, made and published according to the custom of the country, at a time antecedent to the statute requiring a writing and at a time when such oral wills were valid, will be sustained.<sup>43</sup>

Sufficiency of writing The general rule is that, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, it is not necessary that a will be written in English or any particular language.<sup>44</sup> A will written in lead pencil,<sup>45</sup> or partly written in ink and partly in pencil,<sup>46</sup>

partly typewritten and partly printed,<sup>47</sup> or partly printed and partly written,<sup>48</sup> or on a printed form,<sup>49</sup> has been held to satisfy the requirement, but a will written on a slate does not.<sup>50</sup>

tate<sup>64</sup> Stated otherwise, it is only when all the established rules of law for the construction of wills have been applied in vain may the court reject the instrument as impossible of construction<sup>65</sup> On the other hand, the court cannot make a will and supply by construction omitted elements of certainty<sup>66</sup> The courts will hold a will void in its entirety for uncertainty when, after consideration of all its provisions and all the matters which might shed light on it and make it certain, it remains so obscure, indefinite, and ambiguous that no definite idea of the testator's intention can be formed<sup>67</sup> This is particularly true where the court cannot, by the application of reasonable rules of construction, ascertain the intent of the testator<sup>68</sup>

A court is not entitled to pronounce an instrument ambiguous until it has brought to its aid all the light afforded by the collateral facts and circumstances<sup>69</sup> Mere uncertainty of expression and doubtful meaning does not absolve the court from the duty of interpreting a will, unless it is so vague and so indefinite as to render the purpose and meaning incomprehensible<sup>70</sup> The fact that there is uncertainty of complete fulfillment of the intention of the testator does not render his intention uncertain and indefinite<sup>71</sup> Also, the fact that a will is artificially drawn does not effect its validity where the meaning of any particular clause, expounded by a consideration of all other parts of the will, can be ascertained with reasonable accuracy<sup>72</sup>

Provisions of will Uncertainty is fatal to any provision in a will,<sup>73</sup> but a provision of a will should not be stricken for uncertainty or ambiguity if such a result can possibly be avoided<sup>74</sup> A provi-

§ 159. Incomplete Instruments

In order to be effective as a will, the instrument must appear to be so far complete as to have left no part of the testator's intention unexpressed.

A will must be perfect in the testamentary sense and designed as something final in shape, and not preliminary, or it cannot take effect as a will.<sup>81</sup> An instrument may be so incomplete and unfinished that courts will not declare it to be a will,<sup>82</sup> and an instrument will not be declared a will if the testator does not intend it to take effect as such, but intends it to take effect only when additional formalities are completed.<sup>83</sup> In order to be effective as a will, the testator must not depend on some further voluntary act of his own to complete it,<sup>84</sup> and the instrument must appear to be so far complete as to have left no part of the testator's intention unexpressed.<sup>85</sup> The presumption is against an incomplete and unfinished will,<sup>86</sup> some cases holding that an instrument is not a will, where the testator intended some further act to complete it.<sup>87</sup> On the other hand, an incomplete or unfinished instrument has been held to be operative as far as it goes, where the provisions written are complete and embody the last intention of the testator,<sup>88</sup> and the failure to finish the will is not due to a change of mind or desire to abandon it.<sup>89</sup> An incomplete instrument may be given effect as a valid will if it is shown that the testator, at the time of the execution of the instrument, adopted the incomplete instrument as the last expression of his testamentary purpose.<sup>90</sup> If the instrument is coherent and consistent,<sup>91</sup> the fact that there are blank spaces between the words, sentences, or paragraphs of a document otherwise

A will may be comprised of two or more separate instruments

A will may be comprised of two or more separate instruments<sup>97</sup> Thus, two or more instruments, purporting to be wills of the same person and properly executed at the same time, will be treated as one will and as though combined in the same instrument<sup>98</sup> However, except as it may be permitted by the rules regulating incorporation of an extrinsic document in a will by reference, as considered infra § 163, an instrument not of testamentary character<sup>99</sup> and not properly executed<sup>1</sup> cannot, together with an alleged will, constitute the will of the testator Totally inconsistent documents offered as one will should not be taken as one will,<sup>2</sup> and if executed at the same time, both must be held void for uncertainty<sup>3</sup> So, if from the absence of a date and other evidence, it is impossible to ascertain the relative chronological position of two conflicting wills, both are void<sup>4</sup>

It has been stated to be a general rule that wills executed at different times may be treated as one will, as far as they are not wholly inconsistent,<sup>5</sup> and there is no revocation of the earlier will<sup>6</sup> This rule, however, does not permit the ingrafting on a will properly executed of another instrument not of a testamentary character and not executed as a not required,<sup>15</sup> although it is sufficient when made,<sup>16</sup> in the absence of such physical connection, the papers must be identified as one will by their internal sense,<sup>17</sup> by coherence,<sup>18</sup> or adoption of the several parts.<sup>19</sup> Where there is sufficient credible proof of the identity of disconnected sheets propounded as one will, neither the physical nor coherent rule of attachment is applicable.<sup>20</sup> While two or more separate writings may constitute one will when they bear either mechanical evidences of the testator's intention or internal proof that the author intended both to be one,<sup>21</sup> it is an equally well established rule that the absence of a date or a testamentary intent in one document cannot be supplied by another totally disconnected instrument.<sup>22</sup>

While the pages of a will need not follow in numerical order,<sup>23</sup> there must be a sequence of pages or paragraphs which relates to its logical and internal sense.<sup>24</sup> Where an explanation is offered showing why a will is written on papers of different sizes and grades, an objection thereto is overcome by the presumption that the will was prepared in accordance with the testator's instruction.<sup>25</sup>

- c Evidence

a In General

In a number of jurisdictions, a will may incorporate in itself by reference any document or paper not so executed, so as to take effect as part of the will.

The doctrine of incorporation by reference, as applied to wills, is followed in many jurisdictions.<sup>26</sup>

Connection held lacking

(1) Unsigned memoranda on separate pieces of paper found with testator's will, and codicil, which memoranda were not connected in their internal sense and were fastened to will and codicil with moveable non-nutulating paper clips, formed no part of testator's will

(4) Where will specifically referred to trust created by testator and to amendments thereof and will was reaffirmed by codicil after trust was last amended, will effectively incorporated trust agreement by reference

Ohio—First Central Trust Co v Clafin, Comp Pl, 73 NE2d 388

(5) If testator has created a trust, reserving power to amend trust, trust instrument may be incorporated in will by reference, but operative effect of will cannot be changed by a subsequent modification of trust instrument if modification is not executed in accordance with wills act and effect is to be given to will and to provisions of trust instrument as they existed when will was executed and no effect can be given to subsequent modification of trust instrument if not executed in accordance with act which regulates execution of will

Ark—Montgomery v Blankenship, 230 SW2d 51, 217 Ark 357, 21 ALR 2d 212

(6) Where residuary clause of will bequeathed residue of testatrix' estate to trustees of trust created by testatrix on same day as will was executed, and testatrix as settlor reserved power to modify, amend or revoke trust instrument, possibility of amendments to trust by means of unattested writings was insufficient to invalidate will, and original trust instrument and instruments amending trust instrument which

(1) An attempt to incorporate a future document in a will is ineffectual, since testator cannot be permitted to create for himself the power to dispose of his property without complying with formalities required in making a will

Where testatrix by will gave nephew authority to disburse the remainder of her money and personal effects and left a paper in her desk and instructions that a portion of the money was to go for cancer cure, but paper was unsigned and unattested and there was no proof that paper was in existence when will was executed and no testimony was offered, there was no secret trust for cancer cure capable of enforcement

Agreement or contract

(1) A contract whereunder decedent agreed not to change will devising residue of estate to party of second part without consent of party of second part, and which provided that if party of second part predeceased decedent or could not provide for care of decedent before ten years from date of agreement, party of second part should receive interest in residue of decedent's estate to extent determinable by recited formula, which contract was not executed in accordance with section of Decedent Estate Law reciting how will should be executed and attested, could not be incorporated in will by reference, so that contract was ineffective to pass an interest in decedent's estate

(2) Provision in will giving residue and remainder of testator's property to trustee or trustees of trust created by a certain described and existing agreement, and incorporating such agreement in the will, and brought it into being,<sup>56</sup> and in each case it is the substance that must be looked to.<sup>57</sup> If the possibility of fraud or mistake does not exist in the case, the reason for the application of the rule fails.<sup>58</sup>

While papers containing testamentary dispositions may not be incorporated by reference,<sup>59</sup> papers of an identifying or clarifying character may be so incorporated.<sup>60</sup> A bequest of a trust fund created

stating that testator did not intend to incorporate in will any future amendments of agreement, was valid and effective

Letter

Where will made an absolute gift of money to testator's nephew, but requested nephew to distribute so much of the money in such manner and to such charities as testator thereafter designated by letter, a subsequent unauthenticated letter written by testator to nephew designating charities could not be incorporated in will for purpose of construing the absolute bequest as creating a trust in favor of charities

Memoranda

(1) It is axiomatic that memorandum may not be incorporated by reference into a will so as to control the disposition of the testator's estate

Conn—Nash v Danbury Nat Bank, 88 A 2d 397, 138 Conn 676

(2) A testator may not, by reference, incorporate into his will an unattested memorandum of his mere desires

Determination of question

Each case is determinative on its own facts and it has become necessary for the court to distinguish between extraneous papers of a testamentary character and extraneous papers referred to for identification purposes only, a factor regarded extremely difficult at times because the two classes of cases run into each other by almost imperceptible gradations. The inquiry in each instance as to whether the extrinsic memorandum is a mere identification of the thing given or is testamentary in its character is resolved once it has been determined whether the will is complete without additions from extrinsic unattested memoranda so that these unattested papers could be used as evidence to identify the property intended to be given, even if no reference had been made thereto in the will

Nontestamentary instrument or paper

(1) Nontestamentary instruments may be incorporated in wills, if evidence establishes that they were in existence at date when wills were executed, and instruments are clearly identified and are of variety which exclude possibility of alteration, chicanery, fraud, or mistake

N Y—In re Snyder's Will, 125 N Y S 2d 459, appeal dismissed 134 N Y S 2d 174

(2) A nontestamentary extraneous paper may be resorted to and referred to by will for the limited purpose of identifying the thing intended to be given.

during the lifetime of the testator to be administered by the testamentary trustee in accordance with the original trust agreement has been held valid,<sup>61</sup> even though reference to the original trust agreement is necessary to determine the persons ultimately entitled to the bequest,<sup>62</sup> so, also, has a direction that property be disposed of as provided in the will of another,<sup>63</sup> or as another may in his will direct.<sup>64</sup> Even in jurisdictions where the rule here discussed is in effect, a document to be incorporated by reference must be in writing,<sup>65</sup> it must have been in existence at the time the will was executed,<sup>66</sup> it must be referred to and identified with certainty,<sup>67</sup> and it must appear to have been the intention of the testator that the paper referred to be a part of his will.<sup>68</sup> Unsigned memoranda may not be incorporated into a will by reference.<sup>69</sup>

(3) A nontestamentary extraneous instrument may be resorted to for limited purpose of ascertaining identity of beneficiary

NY—In re Stern's Estate, 56 N Y S 2d 631, 189 Misc 639

Account

Where testatrix bequeathed remainder of estate which she received from her husband to her son and daughter's account kept by testatrix showing property received from husband's estate, proceeds she received therefrom and securities purchased did not form part of testatrix' will and could not be incorporated in will by reference, but to extent that account reflected actual transaction it could be used to trace property received by testatrix from her husband's estate

NY—In re Potter's Will, 297 N Y S 295, 251 App Div 679, affirmed 16 N E 2d 93, 278 N Y 534

Envelopes

(1) Will was valid and effective insofar as it bequeathed to the persons named therein the "contents of certain envelopes now in my safe deposit box" containing "securities of various kinds", which envelopes, four in number, addressed separately to legatees, were found in the safe deposit box of testatrix after the death of testatrix

NY—In re Le Collen's Will, 72 N Y S 2d 467, 190 Misc 272

(2) Where a will bequeathed the contents of certain envelopes in safe deposit box of testatrix in a named bank and referred to the envelopes as containing securities of various kinds and identified beneficiaries and quantum of their benefits, and resort to the names appearing on envelopes was only for limited purpose of identifying specific envelopes containing contents bequeathed, the bequests did not come within the prohibition against reference by will to extrinsic documents nontestamentary in character

NY—In re Le Collen's Will, supra

Terms of testamentary trust

A provision in will giving realty and personalty to trustee named in original trust indenture, and directing that such property be added to trust fund held by trustee and be administered in accordance with provisions of indenture, was invalid, and would not be upheld on ground that indenture and its amendments were facts of such independent significance that they might be referred to for purpose of determining the terms of intended testamentary trust, where original indenture was amendable and revocable, and supplemental indentures were made both before and after execution of will

Letter of instruction

Where testatrix bequeathed jewelry and household effects to her husband with the request that he deliver such articles mentioned in a letter of instruction attached to the will to persons therein named, but the will did not clearly identify the letter of instruction and the letter was not of such a nature that the reasonable possibility of identification could be made or reasonable possibility of chicanery or mistake avoided, the letter of instruction was void as a testamentary disposition and notice of probate was not required to the persons mentioned therein

A whole will is not avoided because one provision making reference to an extrinsic document or paper is ineffective<sup>70</sup>

In Louisiana a will cannot be made by mere reference to another document not itself a will,<sup>71</sup> or to a former invalid will<sup>72</sup> It is permissible for a testator to make reference in his will to another writing for the purpose of rendering certain the object to which the will refers,<sup>73</sup> but by such a reference he does not incorporate the other writing into his will<sup>74</sup>

c. Evidence

The burden of proving incorporation by reference is on the party claiming it

The party claiming incorporation of an extrinsic document by reference has the burden of proving its identity by sufficient proof,<sup>75</sup> he must also prove that the testator intended to incorporate such instrument in his will<sup>76</sup> There must be affirmative evidence that a document sought to be enforced as part of the will was in existence when the will was made<sup>77</sup>

While parol evidence is necessarily admissible to prove whether there is or is not in existence at the

testator's death any such instrument as is referred to in the will,<sup>78</sup> and may be received to effect identification where the reference in the will is such as to make the paper referred to capable of identification,<sup>79</sup> nevertheless it is not admissible to show what paper was meant when the uncertainty and ambiguity as to the paper referred to are patent on the face of the will.<sup>80</sup>

§ 164. Codicils

In order to be effective as a codicil, a writing need not assume any particular form or be couched in language technically appropriate to its testamentary character

The courts entertain liberal views as to the form and contents of codicils<sup>81</sup> A writing need not assume any particular form<sup>82</sup> or be couched in language technically appropriate to its testamentary character<sup>83</sup> in order to be effective as a codicil An instrument need not be called a codicil in order to be a codicil,<sup>84</sup> and an instrument called a codicil is not necessarily one,<sup>85</sup> and, as in the case of the will proper, the intention of the testator must be looked to in determining whether a particular instrument is a codicil<sup>86</sup> A codicil to be effective must be either dispositive<sup>87</sup> or appointive<sup>88</sup>

"Expect"

Paper executed by testator subsequent to will and witnessed by two persons, wherein testator referred to provision in will for son to receive three thousand dollars and then stated that he had lent son two thousand two hundred dollars and "expect same to be repaid or deducted" from legacy, was valid as codicil, in view of dispositive character of "expect" Miss—Holcomb v. Holcomb, 159 So. 564

88. Cal—In re Cutting's Estate, 155 P 1002, 172 Cal 191.

A codicil need not necessarily be in the usual form of such an instrument.<sup>89</sup> If it is in writing and properly executed,<sup>90</sup> and is an otherwise legal declaration of the testator's intention which he wills to be performed after his death,<sup>91</sup> it must be given effect as a codicil. Hence, an instrument, executed with a testamentary purpose and the requisite formalities, may operate as a codicil, although it is partly or wholly in the form of a letter,<sup>92</sup> power of attorney,<sup>93</sup> or deed,<sup>94</sup> or although its only provision is one naming an executor.<sup>95</sup> Prior to a decree of probate,<sup>96</sup> a will and codicil are separate instruments for the purpose of considering the formality of their execution,<sup>97</sup> the validity of the one not being dependent on the validity of the other,<sup>98</sup> and

"Desire" and "wish"

Where in codicil testatrix stated her "desire" was that all taxes applicable to the property should be paid out of it and remainder paid to her brothers, and that her "wish" was that "immediate distribution" should be made when the property was received by her "executors," the codicil was not merely expressive of a wish but was a testamentary disposition

NY—In re Bosworth's Will, 55 NYS 2d 422, 269 App Div 252

Envelope

An envelope which contained securities and which was found in testatrix' safe deposit box and apparently executed after execution of will, having on its face instructions signed by testatrix addressed "to my executor," directing delivery of securities to "Mr Gearhart," and also bearing words "Property of Charles C Gearhart" and "Held for safe keeping," was testamentary in character, and was entitled to probate as a codicil

Undated paper

A paper in deceased's handwriting and signed by deceased, but not dated, stating "I want Mamie to have my house" at designated address, and found in a drawer, together with deceased's will and other important papers, pinned to active page of savings account book, was testamentary in character and was entitled to probate as a codicil, where paper could accomplish its intended purpose of conveying realty only as a testamentary disposition, and evidence disclosed that paper was executed subsequent to will

Particular letters

(1) A letter written by testator to designated executors bearing same date as holographic will, which told executors that testator wanted them to see that a friend to whom specific bequest had been made would receive her money as soon as possible, and which expressed hope that such friend should never be in want, could not be admitted to probate as a codicil to be cared for in his old age, was properly admitted to probate as codicil to will

Rule of integration

Where testator the day before his death wrote on a sheet of paper

that he intended it to be his will and that it was intended to "help these people," and witnesses signed that sheet of paper, and testator took that sheet and a second sheet and folded them and put them in an envelope which he sealed and gave to a friend to take to bank, and after testator's death the second sheet was found to contain in testator's handwriting a list of names of persons to which testator desired to have bequest and devise made, and second sheet was not signed, rule of integration was applicable rather than principle of incorporation by reference, and the two sheets were a codicil to will

Cal.—In re Dobrzensky's Estate, 232 P.2d 886, 105 Cal. App.2d 134

(2) Where codicil refers to restrictions in the body of the will, such reference is to be given the same effect as if set forth in the codicil

Pa.—In re Onderdonk's Estate, 189 A. 550, 125 Pa. Super. 124

(3) Fact that purported will was not duly attested does not militate against effectiveness of codicil con-

takably refers to another paper so as to preclude all doubt of its identity, and where the evidence is clear that the testator intended to make that paper part of his will, proof of proper execution of the codicil establishes both instruments as the will of the testator<sup>19</sup>

§ 165. Instrument Operating as Will and Also as Other Document

An instrument may be sustained as a will and also as another instrument, such as a contract or deed.

While ordinarily the same instrument cannot operate both as a will and as some other transfer of property,<sup>20</sup> it sometimes happens that an instrument is so drawn that part of its provisions may be sustained as a will and the remainder, relating to another distinct subject matter, as another instrument,<sup>21</sup> as, for example, a contract<sup>22</sup> or a deed<sup>23</sup>. To have this effect it must employ variant and distinct terms in reference to different pieces of property, clearly indicating the intent to give the instrument a testamentary effect as to one and a present operation as to the other<sup>24</sup>. It is obvious that an instrument cannot operate both as a will and a deed with respect to the same property<sup>25</sup>. Neither can the same instrument be both a contract and a will as to the same property<sup>26</sup>.

§ 166. Alterations

A testator may alter or change his will as he pleases, provided the alterations are made in compliance with the requirements of law.

"Alteration," as applied to wills, has been defined as a change in the words of a will by addition, or erasure, or both, made by the testator or some one acting under his authority, after the execution of the will<sup>27</sup>. A testator may alter or change his will as often as he pleases, and in any respect that suits his fancy,<sup>28</sup> provided the alterations are made in compliance with statutory requirements.<sup>29</sup> Additions, erasures, interlineations, or other alterations are valid and effective when made prior to the execution of the will,<sup>30</sup> and the will so changed is the one which should be received.<sup>31</sup> While it has been held that alterations made subsequent to the execution of the will are of no effect whatever,<sup>32</sup> and do not impair its validity as a whole,<sup>33</sup> especially where the alterations made are of an immaterial nature and do not change the legal effect of the provisions of the will,<sup>34</sup> there is authority that a material alteration made after the execution of the will may operate as a destruction of the will.<sup>35</sup> An alteration does not affect the validity of the provisions not altered, but only those altered, where the two are separable and enforceable independently of each other,<sup>36</sup> and, according to some decisions, the provisions altered are not affected, but may be probated as they first stood, provided their original language can be ascertained.<sup>37</sup> Where the alteration is an immaterial one, validity of the will is not affected whether made before or after the execution of the will,<sup>38</sup> and the alteration, addition, or interlineation in such cases is ignored.<sup>39</sup>

Doctrine held not applicable

Interlineations in a will amounting to the filling of blanks,<sup>40</sup> or which are necessary to the sense of the will<sup>41</sup> and which do not change the sense thereof,<sup>42</sup> are deemed to have been written before the will was executed. The retracing of the signature of one of the attesting witnesses will not invalidate a will otherwise regular and properly executed.<sup>43</sup> An immaterial alteration by a stranger without fraudulent intent has no effect.<sup>44</sup>

There should be no technical and hard rules of construction, where

Liberal or strict construction While some authorities have declared that statutes governing the execution of wills are to be liberally construed,<sup>60</sup> other authorities have declared in favor of strict construction<sup>61</sup>

The words "execute" and "execution," as used in a statute relating to wills, are employed plainly to designate the whole operation, including both the signature or acknowledgment of the testator, and the attestation of the subscribing witnesses, they are not used to designate the testator's part alone<sup>62</sup>

b. Purpose of Statutes

The purpose of statutes prescribing formalities for the execution of wills is to guard against and prevent mistake, imposition, undue influence, fraud, or deception, and not to restrain the power of testators to dispose of their property.

c. Intent of Testator as Affecting Operation of Statutes

The intention to make a will, although clearly stated or proved, will be ineffectual unless the execution thereof complies with statutory requirements.

As discussed infra § 590, it is a cardinal rule of construction and interpretation of wills that the intention of the testator as expressed in the will must govern. However, the intention to make a will, although clearly stated<sup>67</sup> or proved,<sup>68</sup> will be ineffectual unless the execution thereof complies with the statutory requirements<sup>69</sup> With respect to the execution of a will, the intention of the testator is not to be considered at all, but only that of the legislature which governs in determining whether the will is properly executed<sup>70</sup> This intent must be gathered from the language, and from a consideration of the existing law, the evils intended to be remedied, and the remedy applied<sup>71</sup> As has been said, when wills truly expressing the intentions of the testators are made without observation of the required forms, the genuine intention is frustrated by act of the legislature.<sup>72</sup>

d. Sufficiency of Compliance with Statutes

While it has been declared that the statutory requirements with respect to the execution of wills must be strictly followed, it has very generally been held that a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient, provided there is no violation of the express language of the statutory provisions.

While it has been declared that the statutory requirements with respect to the execution of wills must be strictly,<sup>73</sup> precisely,<sup>74</sup> or scrupulously<sup>75</sup>

followed, it has very generally been held that a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient,<sup>76</sup> provided there is no violation of the express language of the statutory provisions.<sup>77</sup> More especially is substantial compliance sufficient where there is no suggestion of fraud, deception, undue influence, or mental incapacity.<sup>78</sup> Nevertheless, any material deviation from the manner of execution prescribed by statute will be fatal to the validity of the will.<sup>79</sup> The fact that there is no fraud, or even suggestion or intimation of it, will not justify the courts in departing from the statutory requirements, even to bring about justice in the particular instance,<sup>80</sup> since any material relaxation of the statutory rule will open up a fruitful field for fraud, substitution, and imposition.<sup>81</sup>

e. Character of Property Disposed of as Affecting Requirements

tion of wills make a distinction between wills of realty and wills of personalty, the requirements as to execution for both types of wills are the same, but under provisions applying in terms to wills of real estate only, the execution of wills of personalty is governed by the requirements of the common law, and under such provisions a will of both real and personal estate may be good as personal estate and void as to the real estate, provided the dispositions of real and personal estate are independent and separable.

Unless the statutory provisions governing the execution of wills make a distinction between wills of realty and wills of personalty, the requirements as to execution for both types of wills are the same.<sup>82</sup> Where statutes prescribing formalities for the execution of wills apply in terms to wills of real estate only, the execution of wills of personalty is governed by the requirements of the common law,<sup>83</sup> and it has been held that the rules of the English ecclesiastical courts still prevail,<sup>84</sup> but with respect to wills of realty strict compliance with the statutory requirements is necessary.<sup>85</sup> Under

With substantial precision

The requirements of the statutes as to the formalities in executing a will must be scrupulously followed in all essential respects, and with substantial precision

82. In Tennessee

(1) Under the statutes in force prior to 1941, there was a distinction between wills of realty and wills of personalty with respect to the manner of execution, but in 1941, the legislature enacted the Uniform Wills Act which makes no distinction in the requirements as to execution between a will of realty and a will of personalty

such statutes a will of both real and personal estate may be good as to personal estate although it is void and inoperative as to the real estate for noncompliance with the statutory requirements,<sup>86</sup> provided the dispositions of real and personal estate are independent and separable.<sup>87</sup> It has been said, however, that the fact that the will is imperfect in part, if known to the testator, is a strong circumstance to show that he did not intend the will to operate for any purpose,<sup>88</sup> and where the disposition of real and personal estate is so blended that the intention of deceased in respect of one estate is made to depend on the other, and the will has been defectively executed, the courts will ordinarily reject the will in toto.<sup>89</sup> A will of both personal and real estate which is defectively executed is inoperative as to both personal and real property where it is expressly provided by statute that any will in writing which purports to be both a disposition of real and personal property that shall not be attested and subscribed as is prescribed by statute as a devise of lands shall not be approved and allowed as a testament of personal property only.<sup>90</sup>

f. Complete Execution Prevented by Act of God

Where the statutory requirements relating to the execution of wills apply in the main only to devises of realty, the rule obtains that, where a testator is prevented from making the formal execution he intended by an act of God, the will may be valid as to personalty, but not as to realty, but there is a presumption against the validity of an unexecuted will, even as a testamentary disposition of personalty.

Where the statutory requirements relating to the execution of wills apply in the main only to devises of real property, the rule obtains that, where a testator is prevented from making the formal execution which he has intended, not by change or abandonment of purpose, but by an act of God, such as extreme illness, loss of mental capacity, or sudden death, the will may be valid as a testament of personal property, but not as a will of real estate.<sup>91</sup> However, it is only where formal execution is so prevented that the instrument may be operative as a will of personalty,<sup>92</sup> and there must be a continuance of the intention of the testator, down to the time when the act of God prevented the execution of the formal instrument,<sup>93</sup> although the fact that a short time elapses between the time the testator might have executed the will and the intervention of an act of God does not affect the operation of the rule, where the delay is not shown to be due to a change of purpose.<sup>94</sup> There is a presumption, however, against the validity of an unexecuted will, even as a testamentary disposition of personalty,<sup>95</sup> especially where it is to alter a previously executed instrument,<sup>96</sup> and it must be shown that the testator adopted and intended the instrument to operate as his will.<sup>97</sup> In most of the jurisdictions where the rule under consideration has been held to obtain, the statutes now require all wills, whether of realty or personalty, to be signed by the testator, as discussed infra § 170. It has been expressly held that, where statutes of this character are in force, an intention to execute, arrested in performance by death, cannot be taken in lieu of performance.<sup>98</sup>

§ 168. Date

Unless a statute provides otherwise, a date is not essential to the validity of a will, and it is not invalidated by an erroneous date.

Unless a statute provides otherwise,<sup>99</sup> a date is not essential to the validity of a will,<sup>1</sup> as the time of its execution may be shown by extrinsic evidence,<sup>2</sup> and it is not invalidated by an erroneous date<sup>3</sup> or rendered ineffective by an alteration or modification in the date thereof<sup>4</sup> Nor is a will rendered invalid by the fact that the sole beneficiary therein inserts the correct date at the request of the testator on his discovering that it has been omitted<sup>5</sup> However, where the testator has left several paper writings purporting to be his last will, each of which is validly executed and makes a different disposition of his property, but only one of them bears date, it has been held that in the absence of proof as to which of the wills was the last one, the legal effect is intestacy<sup>6</sup>

§ 169. Signature or Subscription by or for Testator

Generally speaking, it is essential to the validity of a will that it is signed by or for the testator, as discussed infra §§ 170, 173, but the use of any signature intended by the testator to authenticate it, including a mark, infra §§ 171, 172, will suffice, even though the signing is with the assistance of another, infra § 174. In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, the place of signature is immaterial, as considered infra § 177

a. In General

Statutes in force in most states require wills to be signed by or for the testator

In the absence of statute requiring it, it is not essential to the validity of a will that it be signed by the testator,<sup>7</sup> but statutes now in force in most states require wills to be signed by or for the testator<sup>8</sup> The purpose of the statutes was to remedy the mischief that arose from admitting to probate memoranda, letters, and notes which were inchoate expressions of intentions<sup>9</sup> Under a statute in effect and was attested by witnesses on same date, fact that will bore a different date from date of attestation, the dates being obviously erroneous, was immaterial

Other statements of purpose

The purpose of statute requiring

so providing signature by the testator or by some person in his presence and by his direction is not required when prevented by the extremity of the testator's last illness<sup>10</sup>

When subscription is omitted, the court cannot substitute another signature of the testator, made for a different purpose at another place in the will<sup>11</sup>

b. Alterations by Erasures, Interlineations, or Substitutions

Although there is some authority to the contrary, it has generally been held that, where alterations of a will are made by erasures, interlineations, or substitutions, such alterations are valid and operative only when subscribed by the testator or when he has resubscribed the will

Although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>12</sup> it has generally been held that, where alterations of a will are made by erasures, interlineations, or substitutions, such alterations are valid and operative only when subscribed by the testator or when he has resubscribed the will,<sup>13</sup> and the subsequent acknowledgment by the testator of his prior subscription does not satisfy the requirements of this rule<sup>14</sup> Nor is the operation of the rule affected by the fact that the alteration was made before the testator had declared or published the instrument, and before his request to the witnesses to sign as attesting witnesses and before their names as such were added<sup>15</sup> However, alterations of this character do not affect the validity of such part of the will as was signed in accordance with the requirements of the statute<sup>16</sup>

§ 171. — Requisites and Sufficiency in General

- a In general
- b Several signatures

a. In General

As a general rule, the use of any signature intended by the testator to authenticate the will is sufficient

While "signing," in the usual acceptance of the word, is the writing of a name or the affixing of what is meant as a signature,<sup>17</sup> exactly what constitutes a signing has never been reduced to a judicial formula<sup>18</sup> As a general rule, the use of any signature intended by the testator to authenticate the will is sufficient,<sup>19</sup> no particular form being necessary<sup>20</sup> On the other hand, unless made with the intention of finally and completely authenticating the will, no subscription or signing of any kind will constitute a valid execution thereof,<sup>21</sup> and it has sometimes been expressly so provided by statute<sup>22</sup> However, an imperfect or indistinct subscription of a testator's name may be sufficient if intended as a signature<sup>23</sup> A testator may sign his name by writing it out in full,<sup>24</sup> or by abbreviating it,<sup>25</sup> or by writing his initials only,<sup>26</sup> and the

a will to be signed is to connect testator with the paper, and to establish the finality and completion of testamentary intent

first name of a testator may be by itself a sufficient signature to a will<sup>27</sup> The omission of a letter,<sup>28</sup> or even several letters,<sup>29</sup> from the name of the testator does not render the signature insufficient if intended as such A signature will be sufficient although some of the letters are indistinct and imperfectly formed where the name can be made out without difficulty<sup>30</sup> Mere illegibility of a signature does not prevent its being a legal signature, if introduced and adopted as such<sup>31</sup> Signing by a wrong name will be sufficient if the identity of the testator is sufficiently established, or is not questioned<sup>32</sup> And such is the rule in respect of the use of an assumed name, used for political reasons<sup>33</sup>

Testator may adopt as his sign his own sign-manual made at the foot of his will before its completion and before the witnesses attest and subscribe it His acknowledgment makes it his signature to the will as it stands<sup>34</sup>

Printed or typewritten signature It has been held that a signature, if adopted as such, may be printed,<sup>35</sup> lithographed,<sup>36</sup> or typewritten<sup>37</sup> However, some doubt has been expressed as to the validity of a signature which is not handwritten,<sup>38</sup> and it has been held that if a typewritten signature is relied on, it must be shown, at the very least, that the name of the testator was typed by the testator himself,<sup>39</sup> or for the testator by another in compliance with the requirements, as discussed infra § 173, governing signing for the testator by another.

Signing carbon copy The fact that the testator signs a carbon copy of the will, and not the original, does not affect the validity of the will<sup>40</sup>

b. Several Signatures

Where a will is written on more than one sheet of paper, while it may be considered better practice to have the testator sign each sheet, it is not essential to the validity of the will that he do so, unless required by statute, and generally where a will is signed in several places, it is the last signature which consummates the instrument.

Where a will is written on more than one sheet of paper, while it may be considered better practice to have the testator sign each sheet, it is not essential to the validity of the will that he do so,<sup>41</sup> unless required by statute<sup>42</sup> Where the will is signed several times at different places, it is the last signature which consummates the instrument and makes it a will<sup>43</sup> However, a second signature affixed after the will has been duly executed and has become a completed instrument is in the nature of an interpolation and forms no part of the will itself<sup>44</sup>

ticular mark is necessary<sup>46</sup> However, it is, of course, essential that a mark should be intended to be in lieu of a signature,<sup>47</sup> made for the purpose of executing the will,<sup>48</sup> and the testator should ordinarily distinctly so declare<sup>49</sup> When signing is by mark, in the absence of a statute otherwise providing, it is not necessary that the name of the testator should appear on the face of the will,<sup>50</sup> or accompany, or be attached to, the mark which he makes as his signature,<sup>51</sup> nor is it necessary that the mark be accompanied by the words "his mark"<sup>52</sup>

However, under a statute so providing, the name of the testator should be written near the mark<sup>53</sup> by a person who writes his own name as a witness<sup>54</sup> In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, where the testator makes his mark, that is the signature required by statute and is a sufficient execution of the will, although the name of the testator is written around the mark either at or without the testator's request,<sup>55</sup> and if the name of the testator is written beside the mark made by him as a signature, the fact that there is a mistake

In Kentucky

(1) It has been broadly declared that it is not necessary that a name be signed but that any mark or character is sufficient

Ky—Reed v Hendrix's Ex'r, 201 S W 482, 485, 180 Ky 57, LRA 1918E 423, citing Garnett v Foston, 91 SW 668, 122 Ky 195, 28 Ky L 1119, 121 Am SR 456, 11 Prob Rep Ann 473 and Upchurch v Upchurch, 16 B Mon 102

(2) However, a more recent case asserts that the cases cited do not support the broad declaration made and that when no name is inscribed to the will it is impossible for the testator to "subscribe" to it as required by statute, although testator may subscribe by making a mark to his name which has been inscribed by another

General statute inapplicable

The statute relating to signature of will, under which a mark may constitute a signature, even though testator's name is not written near the mark, is not limited by general statutory rule of construction applicable to subscription of instruments generally, under which a mark may be a signature if the person making it cannot write, and his name is written near the mark

Failure to sign not fatal to will

General statute including a mark within the definition of a signature or subscription when a person cannot write and his name is written near the mark by a person who writes his own name as a witness, is applicable to wills and was intended to put a signature by mark on the footing of a signature by writing, and was not intended to exclude other proof of signature by mark, and hence a will which was shown to be valid in all other respects was not rendered invalid because party who wrote testator's name near his mark failed to write his own name as a witness in the name will not affect the validity of the execution,<sup>56</sup> and although the testator's name is written around the mark made by him as his signature, it has been held not a signing for him by another person within a statute providing that any person who shall sign the testator's name to a will shall subscribe his own name as a witness and state that he subscribes the testator's name at his request, and a noncompliance therewith does not affect the validity of the will,<sup>57</sup> the contrary of this last proposition has, however, been held<sup>58</sup>

b. Inability to Write or Sign Name as Affecting Right to Sign by Mark

While there is authority to the contrary, it has generally been held that the sufficiency of a mark as a signature is not affected by the fact that at the time of making the mark the testator was capable of writing, although such fact may call for great scrutiny before admitting the will to probate.

The rule sustaining the validity of wills executed by mark, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, is especially applicable where the testator is unable to sign his own name,<sup>59</sup> as "a man who cannot write his own name is not to be deprived of the right to make his will"<sup>60</sup> However, while there is authority to the contrary, as shown in the jurisdictional italic paragraphs infra, the rule is not limited to cases where the testator is unable to write, and it has generally been held under statutes prescribing formalities for the execution of wills that the sufficiency of a mark as a signature is not affected by the fact that at the time of making the mark the testator was capable of writing,<sup>61</sup> although it has been said that the fact that a will of a person able to write is signed by mark calls for "great scrutiny" before admitting it to probate<sup>62</sup> This rule is not affected by a general statute providing that in all cases where the written signature of any person is required by law it shall always be the proper handwriting of such person, or, in case he is unable to write, his proper mark or his name written at his request and in his presence<sup>63</sup>

In California the right to sign a will by mark is limited by statute to cases where the person cannot write,<sup>64</sup> but in construing this statute it has been held that physical inability to write, although the testator knew how to write, will authorize a signature by mark<sup>65</sup>

In Louisiana the mark of a person incapable of writing is a sufficient signature to a will where he declares that he does not know how or is not able to sign, and an express mention of his declaration and of the cause that hinders him from signing is made in the will,<sup>66</sup> but even a mark is unnecessary when the testator makes a declaration of inability and it is attested by a notary The statute makes this the equivalent of a signature<sup>67</sup>

In Pennsylvania, the statute providing that, if the testator is unable to sign his name for any reason other than the extremity of his last sickness, the will shall be subscribed in his presence, by his direction and authority, and to which he makes his mark or cross, unless incapacitated from doing so, must be strictly complied with<sup>68</sup> Under such statute, a mark made by a testator who cannot sign for any reason, in conjunction with compliance with the other statutory requirements, is sufficient<sup>69</sup> This provision was intended to embrace cases where the testator is unable to act, whether from lack of education or from physical weakness or disability,<sup>70</sup>

Fact that testator, who was educated, intelligent, and well-informed man, executed will by making mark, calls for closest scrutiny by court if questioned, especially when other circumstances cast cloud of suspicion about will, although such circumstance does not invalidate will Pa.—In re Kline's Estate, 186 A 364, 322 Pa 374

or for any psychological or emotional reason,<sup>71</sup> and it has been said that the sufficiency of the testator's reason for not signing his name is for his own determination and not for the determination of the court.<sup>72</sup> It is not necessary to show that the testator had in the past been without power to sign his name, but the document is sustainable if he is without power presently to do so for other reasons,<sup>73</sup> such as loss of eyesight<sup>74</sup> or the use of his hands.<sup>75</sup> If the other requirements of execution are present, the proof that at some prior time deceased could write will not make the statute inapplicable.<sup>76</sup> Under this statute the testator's name must be signed with his authority in his presence and he must affix his mark,<sup>77</sup> and the execution of a will by mark alone is insufficient,<sup>78</sup> unless the testator is in extremis.<sup>79</sup> The authority or direction to subscribe may be express, or it may be implied from the attending circumstances.<sup>80</sup> Nevertheless, in order to establish implied authority in another from the signing of a will in the testator's presence, it must appear that the testator knew the nature of the document,<sup>81</sup> and that he saw, or was in a position to see, the signing of his name.<sup>82</sup> The order in which the mark is affixed and the name subscribed is immaterial in so far as the validity of the will is concerned.<sup>83</sup> However, implied authority may be shown by the placing of a mark by the tes-

c. Assistance in Making Mark

The fact that the testator is physically assisted in making his mark does not affect the validity of the execution of the will, and the act is his own with the assistance of another, and not the act of another under authority from him.

The fact that the testator is physically assisted in making his mark does not affect the validity of the execution of the will,<sup>85</sup> although when in health he could write.<sup>86</sup> The act is his own with the assistance of another, and not the act of another under authority from him.<sup>87</sup> The extent of the aid given is immaterial,<sup>88</sup> and it is not necessary to prove an express request from the testator for such assistance.<sup>89</sup> One who assists the testator in signing his name by mark is not required to subscribe the will as a witness thereof by a statute providing that every person who shall sign the testator's name to any will shall also subscribe his own name as a witness to the will.<sup>90</sup>

cation that it is not essential to the validity of a will that it be signed by the testator himself, but that it may be signed for the testator, in his presence, by some one else at his direction, and unless the statute otherwise provides, the direction may be implied.

It is a rule of very general, but not universal,<sup>91</sup> application that it is not essential to the validity of a will that it be signed by the testator himself.<sup>92</sup> In most jurisdictions it has been uniformly held that the will may be signed for the testator, in his presence, by some one else at his request or at his direction,<sup>93</sup> and that, too, whether the testator is able to write his name or not,<sup>94</sup> although it would undoubtedly be better that he should sign his own name if able to do so.<sup>95</sup> The other requirements being met, it has been held that any signature or mark made as and for the testator's completed signature and adopted by him as such is sufficient.<sup>96</sup> The effect is the same as though written by the testator himself,<sup>97</sup> and it is not necessary for him to attach his mark to give validity to the will when so signed.<sup>98</sup> If the statute so provides, the request or direction must be express,<sup>99</sup> and mere knowledge of the testator that his name is being signed by another,<sup>1</sup> or that the signing was acquiesced in, or assented to, by the testator<sup>2</sup> will not be sufficient. It must appear that the testator gave direction to the third person for writing his name, consciously and explicitly, and in the free exercise of his faculties.<sup>3</sup> However, in the absence of a statutory requirement of express direction, the testator's direction and authority to sign for him need not be express, but may be implied.<sup>4</sup> Any expression or act signifying the desire to have the will signed is sufficient.<sup>5</sup> While it may be wise as a practical matter that the one who signs the testator's name also signs his own, this is not essential to the validity of the will,<sup>6</sup> except where there is a statutory requirement to that effect.<sup>7</sup>

Forgery

Under circumstances of particular case it was said that if the signature to the purported will was not in the handwriting of the testator, the instrument was necessarily a forgery

Statement of subscription at testator's request

Under a statute providing that any person who shall sign the testator's name to a will shall subscribe his own name as a witness and state that

Agent signing his own name instead of testator's. Under some statutes it has been held that the signing of the will by the agent in his own name and not that of the testator is insufficient, the will must be signed in the name of the testator.<sup>8</sup>

b. By Attesting Witness

An attesting witness may properly sign the testator's name for him, and failure to comply with a statute providing that one who signs the testator's name to a will must also sign his name as a witness may invalidate the will, unless the statute otherwise provides.

An attesting witness may properly sign the testator's name for him.<sup>9</sup> Statutes providing that one who signs the testator's name to a will shall also sign his name as a witness to the will have been held to be mandatory, and a noncompliance therewith invalidates the will,<sup>10</sup> unless the statute expressly provides that such noncompliance shall not affect the validity of the will,<sup>11</sup> or unless the statute although imposing a penalty for noncompliance therewith provides that such noncompliance shall not affect the validity of the will.<sup>12</sup>

c. By Beneficiary under Will

The signing of the testator's name to the will by a beneficiary therein will not invalidate it if it is shown that the beneficiary acted at the testator's request, although it may cast suspicion on the document.

The signing of the testator's name to the will by a beneficiary therein will not invalidate it if it is shown that the beneficiary acted at the testator's request.<sup>13</sup> However, this circumstance casts a suspicion on the document, and places the burden on the beneficiary to prove clearly that the testator understood the instrument and signed it voluntarily and knowingly.<sup>14</sup>

§ 174. — Signing with Assistance of Another

The signature is not rendered invalid by the fact that another guided the hand of the testator when he signed the will, and such act is the testator's own, and not the act of another done under the authority of the testator.

The signature is not rendered invalid by the fact that another guided the hand of the testator when he signed the will.<sup>15</sup> This is not in violation of a statute requiring the will to be signed at the end thereof,<sup>16</sup> and the extent of the aid does not affect the validity of the signature if the signing is in any degree an act of the testator, acquiesced in and adopted by him.<sup>17</sup> Such act is the testator's own, performed with the assistance of another, and not the act of another done under the authority of the testator,<sup>18</sup> and in consequence a statute providing that every person who shall sign the testator's name to any will by his direction shall subscribe his own name as a witness to such will, and state that he subscribed the testator's name at his request, has no application, and a noncompliance therewith does not affect the validity of the will.<sup>19</sup> In order to uphold the validity of such signature it is not necessary that an express request for the assistance be given.<sup>20</sup> It may be inferred from the

he subscribed the testator's name at his request, where the testator's name is signed to his will by his direction and he does nothing more, thereby adopting such signature as his subscription, the person so signing for the testator must also sign his own name as a witness and state that he signed the testator's name at his request.

The general, but not universal, rule is that to give validity to the will the signing by the testator must precede in point of time the signing by the witnesses, and that, if one or all of the witnesses sign before the testator affixes his signature, the will is void, but, although there is authority to the contrary, the fact that part or all of the witnesses sign before the testator is regarded as immaterial when the witnesses and the testator sign at practically the same time and place, in each other's presence, as part of one continuous and complete transaction

The general, but not universal,<sup>24</sup> rule is that to give validity to the will the signing by the testator must precede in point of time the signing by the witnesses, and that, if one or all of the witnesses sign before the testator affixes his signature, the will is void,<sup>25</sup> the view being taken that the attestation of witnesses is "of a past transaction,"<sup>26</sup> and that, until the signature of the testator has been affixed to the will, there is nothing to attest,<sup>27</sup> and that, for some period, longer or shorter, as the case may be, those signatures certify what is not true<sup>28</sup> In a number of jurisdictions, the general rule applies even where the signing by the testator and the signing by the witnesses are a part of one and the same transaction<sup>29</sup> In a number of other jurisdictions, however, the fact that part or all of the witnesses sign before the testator is regarded as immaterial when the witnesses and the testator sign at practically the same time and place, in each other's presence, and as part of one continuous and complete transaction,<sup>30</sup> although in jurisdictions

(1) It has been held that a will which is subscribed by witnesses in the presence of the testator on one occasion and subscribed by the testator in their presence on a later occasion, is deemed to have been attested by the subscribing witnesses at the time of the testator's subscription and is validly executed under a statute requiring wills to be signed by the party making it or by some other person in his presence and by his direction, and to be attested and subscribed in the presence of such party by witnesses who saw the testator subscribe, or heard him acknowledge his signature

where this view prevails, it is conceded that the orderly and far better way is for the signature of the testator to precede in time the signature of the witnesses.<sup>31</sup> An instrument propounded as a will, which was signed by the testator after the witnesses subscribed the will and out of their presence, is void.<sup>32</sup>

§ 177. — Place of Signature

- a. In general
- b. Signature at end of will

a. In General

Where the statute requires no more than that the will shall be in writing and signed, it is immaterial where the testator's signature was placed, if it was placed there with the intention of authenticating the instrument.

Where the statute relating to signing requires no more than the statute of frauds, that is, merely that the will shall be in writing and be signed, it is immaterial where the testator's signature was placed, if it was placed there with the intention of authenticating the instrument.<sup>33</sup> It has accordingly been held that, if intended as a signature, a signing by the testator of his name at the beginning of the will,<sup>34</sup> in the margin,<sup>35</sup> in the body of the will,<sup>36</sup> in the attestation clause,<sup>37</sup> at the commencement of the will and in the attestation clause,<sup>38</sup> or after the attestation clause,<sup>39</sup> will be sufficient. It is essential, however, that the signature, whatever its local position, must have been made with the design of authenticating the instrument and that the testator should have contemplated no further signing.<sup>40</sup> It has been held that whether a signature not signed at the end of the will is intended as a signature to the will is a ques-

Signing not part of same transaction

Where witness signed will in the afternoon and testatrix signed it the following night, but not in the presence of the witness and testatrix subsequently acknowledged to the witness that testatrix signed it, the signing by the testatrix and by the witness could not be construed as a part of the same "transaction."

tion of fact to be answered and controlled by the testimony in each case<sup>41</sup>

In Virginia it is provided by statute that wills shall be signed "in such a manner as to make it manifest that the name is intended as a signature" In construing this statute it is held that no will is sufficiently signed unless it appears affirmatively from the position of the signature, as at the foot or end, or from other internal evidence equally convincing that the testator designed, by the use of the signature, to authenticate the instrument<sup>42</sup> The finality of the testamentary intent must be ascertained from the face of the paper, and extrinsic evidence is not admissible either to prove or disprove it,<sup>43</sup> and then the signature is only an authentication as to so much of the will as it was designed to authenticate<sup>44</sup> It has been held that the mere writing of the testator's name at the commencement of the will is not of itself a signature to the will as it does not indicate finality of intention to authenticate the concluding act of disposition of the testator's property<sup>45</sup> Nevertheless it is not necessary to satisfy the requirements of the statute that it should be signed at the foot or end of the will, but it will be sufficient if signed in such manner as to afford internal evidence of authenticity equally convincing<sup>46</sup>

- (2) Purpose and construction of statutes
- (3) Sufficiency of compliance with requirements

(1) Necessity

In many states statutes require that wills be signed by the testator at the end, and it has very generally been held that noncompliance with the requirement renders a will void in toto, except as the statute otherwise provides

As shown supra subdivision a of this section, where the statute requires no more than that the will shall be in writing and signed, it is immaterial where it is signed However, in many states statutes now expressly require that wills shall be signed or subscribed by the testator at the end, and it has very generally been held that noncompliance with the requirement renders a will void in toto,<sup>47</sup> and not entitled to probate,<sup>48</sup> except as it is expressly provided by statute that the presence of any writing after the signature does not invalidate that which precedes it<sup>49</sup> So, also, where the statute requires the testator to "subscribe" the will, it is held that he must sign the will at the end, the view being taken that there is no difference in the mean-

(2) Purpose and Construction of Statutes

The purposes of the statutes requiring the testator's name to be signed at the end of the will are that it shall appear from the face of the instrument that the testator's intent was consummated and that the instrument was complete, and to prevent fraud. While it has been said that these statutes are subject to strict construction, it has also been held that they are to be construed liberally in favor of the will.

The purposes of the statutes requiring the testator's name to be signed at the end of the will are first, that it shall appear from the face of the instrument itself that the testator's intent was consummated and that the instrument was complete,<sup>51</sup> and second, to prevent or lessen the opportunity for fraudulent or unauthorized alterations or additions to the will.<sup>52</sup> These statutes, it has been said, are subject to strict construction,<sup>53</sup> and should not be frittered away by lax interpretation or by the ingrafting of exceptions.<sup>54</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that these provisions are to be construed liberally in favor of the will,<sup>55</sup> and do not require that form be raised above substance, in order to destroy a will.<sup>56</sup> The statutory requirements will not be extended by judicial construction.<sup>57</sup> In accordance with principles considered supra § 167 c, it is the intent of the legislature, and not that of the testator, which is to be considered in determining whether the statute has been complied with in the signing of the will,<sup>58</sup> although the application of this principle in some cases will work hardship and thwart the intended disposition of property.<sup>59</sup>

It is better that this should happen under a proper construction of the statutes, it was said, "than that the individual case should be permitted to weaken those provisions calculated to protect testators generally from fraudulent alterations of their wills."<sup>60</sup> In accordance with these principles, if the signing of the will is not in compliance with the statutory requirements, the will is void regardless of the testator's intention in good faith to make a valid disposition of his property.<sup>61</sup>

According to some decisions, the end of the will is the "logical end" of the testator's disposition of his property, wherever that end manifestly appears on the paper, and not the point which is spatially farthest removed from the beginning, but there must be a sequence of pages or paragraphs which relates to its logical and internal sense, and the signature must be placed at the sequential end.

According to some decisions, although the end of the writing in point of space may, in most cases, be taken as the end of the disposition of the testator's property for the purpose of determining whether the will has been signed at the end in compliance with statutory requirements,<sup>62</sup> the end of the will, within the meaning of such statutes, is the "logical end" of the testator's disposition of his property, wherever that end manifestly appears on the paper, and not the point which is spatially farthest removed from the beginning,<sup>63</sup> or, as otherwise expressed, the end of the will is the end of the testamentary or dispositive provisions,<sup>64</sup> or the physical termination of the testamentary dispositions which constitute the will, and not the foot or physical end of the sheet of paper on which the will is written.<sup>65</sup> It has been said that presumptively the bottom or end of the sheet on which the will is written is the right place for the signature to show the full expression of the testator's wishes, "but it is only evidence and must give way to evidence of a different intent,"<sup>66</sup> and that in whatever order of pages or sheets a will may be written, it is to be read according to the obvious inherent sense and adaptation of parts.<sup>67</sup> Nevertheless, where the foregoing doctrine prevails, there must be a sequence of pages or paragraphs which relates to its logical and internal sense,<sup>68</sup> the signature must be placed at the sequential end,<sup>69</sup> and this end must not permit the substitution or interpolation of pages in advance unless they are connected as indicated.<sup>70</sup> In New York, in a limited number of decisions of the lower courts, it has been held, in accordance with the views heretofore stated, that the end of a will, within the meaning of the statutes under consideration, is the "logical" and not the physical end.<sup>71</sup> However, the decisions of the court of appeals and numerous decisions of the lower courts have declared either directly or by necessary inference that the end of the will, within the meaning of the statute, is the physical end, and that if the will is not signed at the physical end, it is void<sup>72</sup> Nevertheless, in applying this principle, under the New York statute and another state statute identical therewith, it has been held that the natural and physical end of a will is where the draftsman stopped writing in the consecutive order of composition, and if the will may be read without turning backward or skipping a part and then looking forward again in order to have its sense connected and continuous, it will be considered as signed at the natural and physical end of the will, if when thus read the signature is found at the end,<sup>73</sup> although if material dispositive parts of a will follow the signature, and it is necessary to skip a part, and turn backward, and then to look forward, in order to have the sense connected and continuous, the will is not signed at the end and is invalid<sup>74</sup>

A will is not signed at the end where the signature is followed by any provision or provisions of a testamentary or dispositive character,<sup>75</sup> and such provisions will avoid the entire instrument,<sup>76</sup> except as it is otherwise provided by statute<sup>77</sup> A dispositive clause following the signature will invalidate the will although the property therein disposed of is of inconsiderable value<sup>78</sup> It has been held, however, where a dispositive clause is found beneath the signature of the testator, that the presumption is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the clause was added after the execution of the will, and that so much of the will as precedes the signature is valid<sup>79</sup>

(c) Signature Preceding Matter Not of Dispositive or Material Character

A will is considered signed at the end where matter following the signature is not of a dispositive or material character

A will is considered as being signed at the end where matter following the signature is not of a dispositive or material character<sup>80</sup> In other words, to deny that the subscription of a will is the end thereof, material provisions must be found following the signature<sup>81</sup>

(d) Signature Preceding Clauses Relating to Administration

Although there is authority to the contrary, it has been held that a will is not signed at the end when the signature is followed by a clause appointing an executor, unless the appointing clause was written after the signing of the will, but a will may be considered as signed at the end although the signature is followed by other clauses relating to administration.

In some jurisdictions it is held that a will is signed at the end within the statutory requirement although such signature is followed by a clause appointing an executor,<sup>82</sup> and the ground assigned for this rule is that, under the applicable statutes, the appointment of an executor by the will is not essential to its validity,<sup>83</sup> and that in these circumstances the portion of the paper preceding the signature constitutes a complete will<sup>84</sup> However, this doctrine has been denied in other jurisdictions, where it is held that when a will is written with a final clause appointing an executor and the signature of the testator precedes such clause, the will is not signed at the end thereof,<sup>85</sup> especially where the subscribing witnesses signed at the actual end of the will<sup>86</sup> The reason assigned is that the appointment of an executor is a material and integral part of the will<sup>87</sup> It has been held, however, that although the testator's signature precedes a clause appointing an executor, the signature is nevertheless at the end of the will when the appointing clause was written subsequently to the signing of the will<sup>88</sup> In these circumstances the clause, it is said, is in the nature of an unexecuted codicil and it is void, but it does not invalidate the will<sup>89</sup> In the absence of evidence as to when it was written, the presumption is that such an addition to the will was made after the signature of the testatrix and that of the subscribing witnesses had been put on the paper<sup>90</sup>

Other clauses A will is considered as having been signed at the end although it contains a blank for the appointment of an executor which was not filled in at the time of the execution of the will,<sup>91</sup> or although it precedes a clause relating to the compensation of executors,<sup>92</sup> or providing that the executor shall not be required to give bond<sup>93</sup> A fortiori, the signature will be considered at the end of the will where a clause relating to compensation of executors was written after the testator's signature by a stranger without his knowledge, as this amounted to a mere spoliation of the will<sup>94</sup> However, a signature is not at the end of the will where it is followed by a clause giving the executors a power of sale of property designated, the proceeds thereof to be devoted to liquidating any deficiency that may arise in cash bequests made by the will<sup>95</sup>

Whether the addition of matter after the signature which might affect the construction of the will invalidates it does not appear to have been definitely settled<sup>96</sup>

(f) Blank Spaces in Body or at End of Will

Notwithstanding a blank space left in the body of the will, or between the dispositive part of the will and the signature, the signature is nevertheless subscribed at the end of the will, although, according to some authorities, the will may be invalidated where the blank is unreasonably large

Notwithstanding a blank space left in the body of the will,<sup>97</sup> or between the dispositive part of the will and the signature,<sup>98</sup> the signature is nevertheless subscribed at the end of the will within the statutory requirement, although it has been said that this is imprudent as affording an opportunity for fraudulent practice<sup>99</sup> This rule has been applied in cases where a blank space was left at the foot of the sheet on which the will was written and the signature written on the reverse side thereof,<sup>1</sup> and where the will so completely filled a sheet of legal cap as not to leave room at the bottom for the signature, and the signature was written on a marginal line leaving a space between the signature and the margin of the sheet<sup>2</sup>

Extent of space In one case in which the blank space was in the body of the will it was held that a "long" space did not affect the validity of the will, thus indicating that whether the space was small or extensive was considered of no importance<sup>3</sup> A blank space of one,<sup>4</sup> two,<sup>5</sup> or three<sup>6</sup> lines between the end of the will and the signature will not affect its validity. It has also been held that the name of the testator written "a short distance below the body of the will" is subscribed at the end thereof.<sup>7</sup> In some decisions in which the blank space was at the end of the will, it was in effect held<sup>8</sup> or said<sup>9</sup> that the fact that considerable space intervenes between the end of the will and the signature is of no importance and does not affect the validity of the will. However, other decisions apparently opposed to this view, while recognizing that no general rule can be laid down as to what constitutes an unnecessary and unreasonable blank space between the conclusion of the will and the testator's subscription, and that each case must depend on its own peculiar facts and circumstances,<sup>10</sup> have held or said that the blank space may be so unnecessarily and unreasonably large as to invalidate the will.<sup>11</sup> The signature, it has been said, should be so near to the concluding words of the instrument as to afford a reasonable inference that the testator thereby intended to indicate an authentication of the instrument as a completed expression of his testamentary purposes.<sup>12</sup>

(g) Effect of Marginal Clauses

A will is signed at the end notwithstanding clauses of a testamentary character are written in the margin where they are so numbered as to show they are to be read in relation to other provisions and the connected sense is entirely clear.

A will is signed at the end notwithstanding clauses of a testamentary character are written in the margin of a page of the will, where these clauses are so numbered as to show where they are to be read in relation to the other provisions and the connected sense is entirely clear.<sup>13</sup> However, a will having on the last page a dispositive clause written in the margin extending lengthwise on the page and not connected with the body of the instrument by any reference to indicate where the marginal matter is to be read in relation to the other provisions is not signed at the end,<sup>14</sup> although the marginal matter was written at the request of the testator and before he attached his signature under the body of the will.<sup>15</sup> A marginal insertion, a part of which comes below the signature, will not invalidate the will, where it merely declares a distribution which the law itself would decree with the provision omitted, and is wholly immaterial.<sup>16</sup>

(h) Signature Following or in Attestation Clause

The signature of a testator following the attestation clause is a signing at the end, and although there is authority to the contrary, it has been held that a signing of the testator's name in the attestation clause with the intent of executing the will is a signing at the end of the will.

The signature of a testator following the attestation instead of the testimonium clause is a signing at the end of the will and meets the requirement of the statute.<sup>17</sup> A fortiori, a valid execution of the will cannot be defeated by the act of the witnesses in inserting their signatures above that of the testator after he has signed.<sup>18</sup> So, although there is authority to the contrary,<sup>19</sup> it has been held

(1) It has been held that a will is not signed at the end thereof by the party making it, when it is written by the party making it, on a printed blank form containing a testimonium clause with blanks for the name of the place and the date of execution, which he fills, and immediately following this a blank line for the signature of the maker, which he leaves blank, although he has written his name in the attestation clause, immediately following the testimonium clause, in a blank

that a signing of the testator's name in the attestation clause with the intent of executing the will is a signing at the end of the will,<sup>20</sup> the view being taken that the attestation clause forms no necessary part of the will.<sup>21</sup> Nevertheless, a signature occurring in the attestation clause for the purposes of the attestation clause cannot be considered a subscription to the will where there is nothing to show that the testator made it with such intention and where it was not made or acknowledged in the presence of the witnesses.<sup>22</sup> An intention to make a will does not show that the testator's name appearing in the attestation clause was intended to be a subscription.<sup>23</sup>

(i) Nontestamentary Clauses Intervening between Testamentary Clauses and Signature

A will is signed at the end although clauses not of a testamentary character intervene between clauses of a testamentary character and the signature.<sup>24</sup>

(j) Signature to Will and Schedule Attached Thereto

Where the body of a will referred to a schedule attached thereto, and the body of the will was signed at the end and the schedule was also signed, the statutory requirement was satisfied.

Where the body of a will referred to a schedule attached thereto, and the body of the will was signed and attested at the end, and the schedule was attached, and referred to the will, and it was also signed and attested, the will was within the statutory requirement that wills be signed at the end thereof.<sup>25</sup> Where a will is signed at the end of the dispositive provisions, a subsequent page containing a list of the testatrix' property without any dispositive directions will be disregarded.<sup>26</sup>

(k) Signed or Unsigned Codicils

The fact that a codicil following the will is not signed does not affect the validity of the will, and where a will and a codicil thereto are both legally executed, the fact that the codicil was written in the blank space between the last dispositive item and the testimonium clause does not invalidate the instrument.

The fact that a codicil following the will is not signed does not affect the validity of the will where the latter is properly signed at the end, although the codicil itself is inoperative for want of a signa-

ture, since the two are separate instruments<sup>27</sup> If this were not so, it has been said, a codicil whereby the previous provisions of a will were intended to be canceled or modified would operate as a revocation of the will itself, which can only be done in the manner indicated by statute<sup>28</sup> So, where a will and the codicil thereto are both legally executed, the fact that the codicil was written in the blank space between the last dispositive item and the testimonium clause does not invalidate the instrument.<sup>29</sup> It has also been held that, where the testatrix procured a notary to draw her will, and, after making several bequests, made a charitable bequest in what the notary designated as a codicil and addition to the will, the latter, when made at the same time, is to be regarded as a continuation of the will itself, so that the signatures of the testatrix and her witnesses are properly placed at the end of the act, and the writing of this additional bequest did not amount to a turning aside to another act, so as to render the will invalid<sup>30</sup>

§ 178. Reading of Will by or to Testator

As a general rule it is not necessary that the will be read by or to the testator, but it is sufficient if it is shown that its contents were known to, and approved by, him at the time of execution, as where it is executed substantially in accordance with his instructions

As discussed supra § 130, it is indispensable to the validity of the will that the testator should know and understand its contents Nevertheless, the general rule is that it is not necessary that the will be read by or to the testator, but it is sufficient if it is shown that its contents were known to, and approved by, him at the time of execution,<sup>31</sup> as where it is executed substantially in accordance with his instructions,<sup>32</sup> in which event it may be considered as sufficient evidence that the testator was acquainted with its contents.<sup>33</sup> It has been held,

however, if the case is one in which the person who writes the will takes a large benefit under it, then, in order to show that the testator knew the contents of the will, that it is necessary to prove that the will was read to him, or read by him, or that he gave instructions for such a will, or to prove some other fact or facts equal as evidence to one of these,<sup>34</sup> and that, where a will, as drafted, introduces substantial variations from the testator's instructions and is not read by or to him, or its contents or variations from the instructions not otherwise explained to him, the will is void,<sup>35</sup> although if he knew of and approved the alterations, he adopts them by the execution of the will, and it should be confirmed.<sup>36</sup>

Reading in presence of witnesses. As considered supra § 130, knowledge of the contents of a will must be shown where the testator is blind and cannot read it However, the presence of the witnesses during the reading of the will to a blind testator is not necessary, in the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect<sup>37</sup> Although statutes require a will which has been dictated to be read in the presence of the subscribing witnesses, if the proof of a will being read over to the testator in the presence of the witnesses is furnished by the instrument itself, it is immaterial in what manner proof is furnished<sup>38</sup>

§ 179. Seal

In the absence of a special statutory requirement, it is not essential that a will be executed under seal.

§ 180. Revenue Stamp

Although a statute requires a revenue stamp to be affixed to a will, a will is not rendered invalid because no stamp is placed on it at the time of execution<sup>41</sup> It is the duty of the register to do it at the expense of the executor, before he issues letters testamentary<sup>42</sup>

§ 181. Acknowledgment

- a. In general
- b. Under act of congress relating to Five Civilized Tribes
- c. Under other acts of congress

a. In General

In the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect, it is not essential that a will be acknowledged before an officer authorized to take acknowledgments, but an acknowledgment will not vitiate a will

In the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect, it is not essential that a will be acknowledged before an officer authorized to take acknowledgments<sup>43</sup> Although a certificate of acknowledgment of a will is unnecessary and useless for any purpose as an official certificate,<sup>44</sup> the affixing of a certificate of acknowledgment to a sufficiently executed and attested will is considered nothing more than surplusage and does not vitiate it.<sup>45</sup>

b. Under Act of Congress Relating to Five Civilized Tribes

Under federal statutes relating to the Five Civilized

Tribes, a will of a full-blood Indian devising realty which disinherits persons who would otherwise take by descent is void unless acknowledged and approved by a designated officer.

Under federal statutes having to do with the Five Civilized Tribes and providing that "Every person of lawful age and sound mind may by last will and testament devise and bequeath all of his estate, real and personal, and all interest therein: Provided, That no will of a full-blood Indian devising real estate shall be valid, if such last will and testament disinherits the parent, wife, spouse, or children of such full-blood Indian, unless acknowledged before and approved by a judge of the United States court for the Indian Territory, or a United States commissioner, or a judge of a county court of the State of Oklahoma," a will disinheriting persons who would otherwise take by descent is void unless acknowledged before, and approved by, one of the officers therein designated,<sup>46</sup> and the facts of acknowledgment and approval must both be certified by the officer on the will and appear on it when probated and placed of record.<sup>47</sup> In the absence of such certificate the will is invalid, notwithstanding the commissioner testified that the acknowledgment was duly made, but the certificate thereof inadvertently omitted, parol evidence not being admissible to prove the fact of acknowledgment or approval.<sup>48</sup>

Persons protected by statute Since the statute is limited in its terms to "parent, wife, spouse, or children" of a full-blood Indian, it has no application to grandchildren, great-grandchildren, or other relations further removed, and a full-blood Indian may make a will disinheriting them although not ac-

"Disinherit" defined and explained. The term "disinherit," as used in the statute, means an act by which a person deprives his heirs who, without such act, would inherit <sup>50</sup> A will of a full-blood Indian "disinherits," within the contemplation of the act, if, without the approval required, it thereby deprives, or seeks to deprive, parent, wife, spouse, or children of any estate which they would have inherited in case of his intestacy. <sup>51</sup> Disinheritance results invalidating a will not acknowledged and approved as provided by the statute where tracts devised to each child by the will of a full-blood Indian are not of substantially the same value at the date of the testator's death, <sup>52</sup> or where the land devised to the wife is of less value than that which she would have inherited by the law of descent then in force, such value to be determined as of the date of the testator's death <sup>53</sup> On the other hand, if at the date of the death of a testator the lands devised to the beneficiaries are of substantially the same value, the will is not invalid as disinheriting either of them <sup>54</sup>

Necessity for compliance with state laws governing execution The statutes under consideration do not confer an absolute right of disposition of Indian property without regard to the law of the state where it was located, and the will of a full-blood Indian must be executed with the same formalities of the statute law of the state as are required of any other citizens of whatever degree of blood or nationality <sup>55</sup>

Whether acknowledgment and approval an element of execution and attestation While some of the earlier decisions were to the contrary, <sup>56</sup> it is now settled that the approval and acknowledgment of the will of a full-blood Indian, as provided for by the federal statute, are not an element of execution and attestation required by the Oklahoma statutes, <sup>57</sup> and are not within the purview of the jurisdiction of a probate court of Oklahoma in admitting a will to probate under the laws of that state <sup>58</sup> Hence, admitting the will to probate does not involve the determination of the question whether or not the will has been acknowledged in the manner required by the act of congress, <sup>59</sup> and a judgment probating a will which has not been acknowledged as required by the statute does not operate to disinherit the heirs, <sup>60</sup> or bar them from presenting their claim that the will was invalid under the provisions of the act of congress <sup>61</sup> Although the will has been admitted to probate no title to property is conveyed thereby, if it was not valid under the federal statute <sup>62</sup>

Under various acts of congress the right of Indians to dispose of property by will is conditioned on the will being made and executed in accordance with regulations of the secretary of the interior and being approved by him.

Under the act of congress relating to the disposition of property by Osage Indians, it is not incumbent on the secretary of the interior to approve the will of an Osage Indian although the will was in strict accordance with the laws of the state <sup>63</sup> Where, by will, and with approval of the secretary of the interior, an adult Osage Indian disposes of all her separate property, in equal shares to her surviving husband and four children by former marriages, a state court is without jurisdiction to alter such will so as to give one third of such property to the surviving husband, the validity of the will not being questioned except as to the division made of the property <sup>64</sup> So long as the will stands, the disposition of the property made by its terms must also stand, since the court cannot make a new will or direct a different division of the property from that made by the testatrix with the approval of the secretary of the interior<sup>65</sup> Under an act of congress relating to Indian allottees generally, their right to dispose of restricted and trust property by will free from the limitations of state law is conditioned on the will being made and executed in accordance with the regulations of the secretary of the interior and being approved by him<sup>66</sup> The secretary may set aside approval of the will on the ground of fraud in the execution or procurement of the will within the time limited by statute,<sup>67</sup> and he may set aside the approval at any time on the ground of lack of testamentary capacity, undue influence, or failure to comply with the rules and regulations in connection with the execution of the will, or on the ground of fraud, failure of subordinate officers to report the true facts to the secretary, or other like grounds whereby approval of the will was induced<sup>68</sup> Considering the scope of the jurisdiction conferred on the secretary over the restricted estates of Indians, a liberal rule of interpretation should be adopted for the proper administration of such estates<sup>69</sup> In a proper case a court of equity may correct a mistake made by the secretary in approving a will<sup>70</sup>

- b Definitions and distinctions
- c. Facts which witnesses attest; duty of witnesses

a. In General

The attestation and subscription by witnesses, where required, must be in accord with the formalities and solemnities prescribed by the applicable statute

The attestation and subscription by the witnesses, where required, must be in accord with the formalities and solemnities prescribed by the applicable statute<sup>71</sup>

Under some statutes so providing no formal attestation is necessary,<sup>72</sup> and any form of signing the will with the intention of acting as a witness is sufficient<sup>73</sup>

What papers must be produced. In order to have an effective attestation, where a will is on separate sheets, all should be produced at the time of attestation<sup>74</sup>

b. Definitions and Distinctions

"Attestation" with respect to wills is the act of witnesses in seeing that those things exist and are done which the attestation clause declares were done and which the statute requires, and it has been distinguished from "subscription"

Lack of full hearing

The secretary of the interior is authorized to set aside the approval of an Indian's will more than a year after the death of the Indian and to grant a rehearing, which was not based on fraud, but sought on the ground that a full and complete hearing was not had before the examiner of inheritance

"Attestation" with respect to wills is the act of witnesses in seeing that those things exist and are done which the attestation clause declares were done and which the statute requires.<sup>75</sup> It consists in the subscription of the names of the witnesses to the attestation clause as a declaration that the signature of the testator was made and acknowledged in their presence,<sup>76</sup> and it is also a declaration that they bear witness and certify to the facts required by law to make a valid will.<sup>77</sup>

"Attestation" and "subscription" compared and distinguished While the words "attestation" and "subscription," as used with respect to wills, are virtually synonymous,<sup>78</sup> and attestation ordinarily involves subscription,<sup>79</sup> the two acts are separate and distinct, attestation being a mental operation, an act of the senses, while subscription is a mechanical one, an act of the hand.<sup>80</sup>

To "attest" the signature of a testator means to take note mentally that the signature exists as a fact.<sup>81</sup>

An "attesting witness" is one who signs his name to an instrument for the purpose of proving and identifying it or who signs with the intention of being considered a witness to an act in question.<sup>82</sup>

c. Facts Which Witnesses Attest; Duty of Witnesses

In attesting a will, the witnesses are required to see that those things exist and are done which the statutes require to exist or be done in order to make a valid will, and their attestation generally requires and imports their belief that the testator is of testamentary capacity and that there is no fraud.

In attesting a will, the witnesses are required to see that those things exist and are done which the statutes require to exist or be done in order to make the instrument in law the will of the testator.<sup>83</sup> Thus, attestation by persons who have a personal knowledge that the will was signed by the testator or testatrix, or by some other person under his or her direction in his or her presence, constitutes a certification that the signature was genuine.<sup>84</sup>

Testamentary capacity of testator. It is a rule of general application that, in addition to attesting to the due execution of the will by the testator, the attesting witnesses must satisfy themselves,<sup>85</sup> or at least entertain the belief,<sup>86</sup> that the testator is of sound mind and memory, at the time of the execution thereof.<sup>87</sup> The rationale of the rule is that one who signs his name to a will as a witness there-

"To attest the publication of a paper as a last will and to subscribe to that paper the names of the witnesses, are very different things, and are required for obviously distinct and different ends. of declares that the testator is mentally capable of making the will,<sup>88</sup> for certainly no credible person of intelligence would attest such an instrument if he knew, or had reasonable cause to believe, that testamentary capacity was wanting<sup>89</sup> Hence, if the witnesses think the testator lacking in capacity to make a will, they should refuse their attestation<sup>90</sup>

On the other hand, it has also been held that while it is highly desirable that attesting witnesses should satisfy themselves as to the testamentary capacity of the testator,<sup>91</sup> it is not a duty imposed by law,<sup>92</sup> so that the failure on their part to determine that he had the necessary capacity,<sup>93</sup> or to testify to his testamentary capacity,<sup>94</sup> will not invalidate the will, and such failure goes only to the credibility of the witness<sup>95</sup> Where nothing appears to the contrary, witnesses to a will may assume that the testator is sane, and has testamentary

capacity<sup>96</sup>

Absence of fraud It is also the duty of the witnesses to see that no fraud is committed on the testator and that the act of the testator is his free and voluntary act.<sup>97</sup>

§ 183. — Necessity and Purpose

In general, attestation and subscription by witnesses are essential to the validity of wills.

While at common law it is not essential to the validity of a will that it should be attested<sup>98</sup> or subscribed<sup>99</sup> by witnesses, in most jurisdictions attestation and subscription by witnesses are, by statute, made essential to the validity of wills of both real and personal property<sup>1</sup>

The fact that statutes contain both the words "attest" and "subscribe" is of no special significance<sup>2</sup> The essential element is subscription of their names by the witnesses,<sup>3</sup> and subscription is necessary under statutes merely requiring the will to be "witnessed"<sup>4</sup> or "attested,"<sup>5</sup> the view being taken that either of these terms is broad enough to include subscription

The statutes requiring attestation or subscription are mandatory,<sup>6</sup> and subject to strict construction<sup>7</sup>

Purpose of requirement It has been variously stated that the purpose of the requirement of attestation or subscription and their attendant formalities is to remove uncertainty as to the execution of wills and to safeguard testators against frauds and impositions,<sup>8</sup> to provide against false and fraudulent wills and to afford means of determining their authenticity,<sup>9</sup> to establish that all legal steps necessary to make the will a legal instrument have been taken,<sup>10</sup> to determine the capacity of the testator to make the will,<sup>11</sup> or to prevent the diversion of a decedent's estate from those who would take it under the statutes of descent and distribution, except in those instances where the decedent has clearly and deliberately expressed an intention so to divert it<sup>12</sup> It has also been held that the purpose of requiring subscription by witnesses, as distinguished from attestation, is to identify the paper offered for probate as the same instrument which was executed by the testator in the presence of the witnesses<sup>13</sup>

Wills disposing of both real and personal property Where there is no statutory requirement that wills of personalty be attested, a will which is insufficient as a devise of real property because it is not attested in accordance with statutory requirements may nevertheless be sufficient as to personalty bequeathed thereby,<sup>14</sup> if the dispositions of realty and personalty are separable and independent,<sup>15</sup> although it has been said that it is a question of fact whether the testator intended that his will should stand as to personalty, even though invalid as to realty, the presumption being that he did<sup>16</sup> The foregoing doctrine, however, does not apply where it is specially provided by statute that any will in writing which purports a disposition of both real and personal property, that shall not be attested and subscribed as is prescribed by statute as a devise of lands, shall not be approved and allowed as a testament of personal property only<sup>17</sup>

Charitable testamentary gifts Attesting witnesses are not necessary under some statutes in order to validate charitable testamentary gifts<sup>18</sup>

- Witnesses to gifts to subscribing witness
Under statute providing that all gifts made in a will to a subscribing witness shall be wholly void unless there be two other competent witnesses to the same, two other competent subscribing witnesses are required, and not merely two other persons who can testify to facts showing the execution of the will in conformity with the statute, as the phrase "witness to a will" has a well-settled meaning, and means one who has attested the will by subscribing his name thereto, and mere bystanders are not witnesses to the will, much less competent witnesses

Where a will disposing of real and personal property concludes with an unexecuted attestation clause, even though witnesses are unnecessary to make it effective as to personalty attempted to be bequeathed, a slight presumption arises that will is incomplete and does not reflect testator's true intent, but the presumption, being slight, may be overcome by circumstances of the same degree

§ 184. — Number of Witnesses

It is essential to the validity of a will that it be subscribed by the number of witnesses prescribed by statute, but attestation by more than the required number does not invalidate an otherwise good attestation.

The number of witnesses requisite to the validity of a will is a matter of statutory regulation which must be complied with,<sup>20</sup> and unless subscribed by the number designated by the statute the will is invalid<sup>21</sup> and not entitled to probate<sup>22</sup>

On the other hand, if the will is signed by the requisite number of witnesses the statutory requirement is satisfied,<sup>23</sup> and in such case, the fact that in the body of the will two were named to act as witnesses, while the will was signed by one of them only, is of no consequence<sup>24</sup>

Excessive number of witnesses Attestation by more than the required number of witnesses does not invalidate an attestation otherwise good,<sup>25</sup> since this neither adds to, nor detracts from, what has already been done<sup>26</sup> It is immaterial that the unnecessary witness was incompetent to prove its execution,<sup>27</sup> or failed to comply with the statutory requirement that his name be signed in the presence of the testator<sup>28</sup> or of the other attesting witnesses,<sup>29</sup> or was not present at the execution of the will, and signed it without the testator's request<sup>30</sup>

a. In General

Attesting witnesses are required to be competent at the time of the execution of the will; and generally, all persons are competent as witnesses to a will who are legally competent to be sworn and able to testify in a court to the facts which they attest.

Statutes relating to witnesses require that the witnesses shall be "competent" or "credible,"<sup>31</sup> and the courts have uniformly held that the words "credible" and "competent" are synonymous, the word "credible" meaning "competent"<sup>32</sup> Hence, the mere fact that a subscribing witness may be unworthy of belief in public estimation does not make him not "credible" within the contemplation of the statute if he is otherwise competent<sup>33</sup> The competency of a witness to subscribe a will as an attesting witness is to be determined by the rules of the common law unless it is otherwise provided by statute,<sup>34</sup> and on the other hand if the matter of competency is regulated by statute, competency must be tested by the statute and not by the common law<sup>35</sup>

Generally speaking, all persons are competent as witnesses to a will who are legally competent to be sworn and able to testify in a court of justice to the facts to which they attest in subscribing their names to the will<sup>36</sup> In other words, such persons are competent as witnesses to a will as are not legally disqualified to testify in a court of justice,<sup>37</sup> as by reason of mental incapacity,<sup>38</sup> interest,<sup>39</sup> the commission<sup>40</sup> or conviction<sup>41</sup> of a crime, want of religious belief,<sup>42</sup> or other causes excluding them from testifying generally,<sup>43</sup> or rendering them incompetent in respect of the particular subject matter or in the particular suit<sup>44</sup>

Signature as witness to mark

The mere fact that signature of person who prepared the will was accompanied by words "witness to mark" did not disqualify him from being a subscribing witness

Md—Van Meter v Van Meter, 39 A. 2d 752, 183 Md. 614.

Age of witness; infants In passing on the capacity of a subscribing witness to testify, for purposes of determining his competency, limitations as to age are no different from the tests applied to witnesses actually called in trials of actions or proceedings generally.<sup>45</sup> It follows that the infancy of a subscribing witness is not of itself sufficient to invalidate a will,<sup>46</sup> and the test of his competency should be his capacity or intelligence, his appreciation of the difference between truth and falsehood, and his understanding of the obligations of an oath.<sup>47</sup> Accordingly, if a witness is old enough to receive a just impression of the facts surrounding the execution of the will and to relate them truthfully and with a reasonable degree of accuracy, he is competent.<sup>48</sup> However, it has also been held that a person under fourteen is presumed incompetent as a witness, but the presumption may be rebutted.<sup>49</sup>

Capacity to see, hear, and write A defect of sight or hearing does not render a person incompetent as a witness to a will, but such infirmity can only be considered as operating on the effect of his testimony.<sup>50</sup> One is not rendered incompetent to witness a will by the fact that he cannot write.<sup>51</sup>

to a will shall be personally acquainted with the testator,<sup>52</sup> especially where the issue of testamentary capacity is involved, as in the case of very aged people,<sup>53</sup> it has nevertheless been held or said that a stranger to the testator is not incompetent to act as a witness,<sup>54</sup> unless a statute requires that the witness be personally acquainted with the testator.<sup>55</sup> Nevertheless, one attesting a will should satisfy himself of the identity of the testator<sup>56</sup> and of his capacity to make a will,<sup>57</sup> but it has been held that while it is helpful for an attesting witness to have knowledge of the mental capacity of the person executing a will,<sup>58</sup> it is not necessary that the witness have such knowledge in order to be competent to sign as a witness,<sup>59</sup> and the fact that an attesting witness knows very little about the testamentary capacity of the testator does not disqualify him.<sup>60</sup>

Time at which competency must exist. The competency and interest of the attesting witnesses are to be tested as of the date of execution of the will and the making of the attestation,<sup>61</sup> and not at the time when it is presented for probate.<sup>62</sup> Accordingly, incompetency, subsequent to attesting the will, from whatever cause, does not impair or in any way affect its validity,<sup>63</sup> or prevent the probate and allowance of the will, if it is otherwise

Insanity

Ohio—Shupp v Farrar, 88 NE 2d 924, 85 Ohio App 366

satisfactorily proved,<sup>64</sup> although an interest acquired after execution of the will may be shown for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of the witness.<sup>65</sup> Conversely, although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>66</sup> it has very generally been held that, if at the time of the execution of the will an attesting witness was incompetent, nothing occurring after can make him competent,<sup>67</sup> and that he cannot by release, assignment, or other act render himself competent,<sup>68</sup> unless it is otherwise provided by statute.<sup>69</sup>

b. Interested Witnesses Generally

Except as the rule has been abrogated or modified by statute, interest will render a person incompetent as a witness to a will, and the true test of interest is whether the witness will gain or lose financially as the direct result of the proceeding or whether the record will be legal evidence against him in some other action.

By the common law interest rendered a person incompetent as a witness to a will, and such is the rule except where it has been abrogated or modified by statute,<sup>70</sup> and the rule is particularly applicable in those jurisdictions in which it has been incorporated into statute.<sup>71</sup> A witness, incompetent by reason of interest, it has been said, is not "credible."<sup>72</sup>

On the other hand, by statute in some jurisdictions, incompetency by reason of interest has been abolished as to all classes of interested witnesses,<sup>73</sup> or the effect of the statutes is to render subscribing witnesses to a will competent irrespective of any "interest in the event" which might disqualify such witness in another type of proceeding.<sup>74</sup> Where this is true, a creditor of the testator has been held competent to act as subscribing witness,<sup>75</sup> and in many jurisdictions, as appears infra subdivision c of this section, statutes avoid a bequest or devise to a witness and render him a competent witness.

Test of interest Interest of itself, without regard to its nature or bearing on the issue, has never operated to exclude a witness from giving evidence,<sup>76</sup> and the true test of interest is whether the witness will gain or lose financially<sup>77</sup> as the direct result of the proceeding,<sup>78</sup> or whether the record will be legal evidence against him in some other action.<sup>79</sup> It has very generally been held that the interest which will disqualify an attesting witness must be a present, direct, certain, and vested interest, and not one which is remote, indirect, uncertain or contingent,<sup>80</sup> and where the interest is remote and of a doubtful nature, the objection goes to the credit, and not to the competency, of the witness.<sup>81</sup> On the other hand any direct pecuniary interest, however minute, will disqualify a witness.<sup>82</sup>

In Maine, the rule stated above, as to the test of interest, was apparently approved in the early decisions,<sup>83</sup> but under later decisions, while it is recognized that a direct, certain, and pecuniary interest is a beneficial interest which will disqualify an attesting witness,<sup>84</sup> it is further held, contrary to the general trend of authority, that even an indirect, uncertain, and contingent interest may be a beneficial interest if it has a present appreciable pecuniary value so that the witness may reasonably be said to gain financially because of it<sup>85</sup> Where there is a disqualifying interest it is that fact, and not the measure of the value of the interest, which controls<sup>86</sup>

c. Devisees or Legatees

While it is generally held, apart from statute, that devisees or legatees, because of their interest, are incompetent to act as attesting witnesses, under statutes forfeiting the devises or legacies they may be competent witnesses, and under some statutes they are made competent without avoidance of the devise or legacy.

In accordance with the principles considered supra subdivisions a and b of this section, it has very generally,<sup>87</sup> but not universally,<sup>88</sup> been held, in the absence of statute providing otherwise, that devisees or legatees, because of their interest, are incompetent to act as witnesses to wills and that a will attested by legatees or devisees is void unless, excluding them as witnesses, there are a sufficient number of competent witnesses to satisfy the statutory requirements. This situation, however, was remedied by the English parliament by the enactment of legislation which rendered void devises or legacies to witnesses to wills and made them competent subscribing witnesses, thus avoiding the sacrifice of the will except as to the devises or legacies to the witnesses<sup>89</sup> Accordingly, in many states a witness to a will who is also a devisee or legatee is now a competent subscribing witness to a will,

although prevented from taking any benefit thereunder, either by reason of the adoption of the English statutes as a part of the common law of the state or the enactment of statutes of a similar import,<sup>90</sup> and such is now also the rule in the Philippines by virtue of express statutory provision<sup>91</sup>

By statute in some states a legatee or devisee is made a competent attesting witness and the devise or bequest to him is not avoided by reason of his interest,<sup>92</sup> and the fact that he is the chief beneficiary,<sup>93</sup> or even the sole beneficiary,<sup>94</sup> does not affect the operation of this rule

The right of an attesting or subscribing witness to take under a will is discussed supra § 102.

Release or assignment of interest In accordance with the view that a witness to a will must be competent at the time of the execution of the will, discussed supra subdivision a of this section, it is the rule, unless it is otherwise provided by statute,<sup>95</sup> that a legatee or devisee who is a subscribing witness cannot become a competent subscribing witness by releasing his claim thereunder, and the will is not well executed notwithstanding such release<sup>96</sup> In some jurisdictions it has been held that while a witness who releases his claim may thereby become a competent attesting witness, such result cannot be achieved by his assignment of his claim to another<sup>97</sup>

Presence of legatees A statute providing that a will cannot be witnessed by one of the legatees does not mean that the presence of a legatee when the will is made shall render the will invalid<sup>98</sup>

d. Spouse or Relative of Beneficiary

While a husband or wife is not, at common law, a competent attesting witness of a will making the other a beneficiary, under various statutes modifying the rule the husband or wife of a beneficiary may be a competent witness. A relative of a beneficiary is not an incompetent witness.

At common law, under the rule that husband or wife shall not testify in a cause in which the other was interested, discussed in the CJS title Witnesses § 75, also 70 C J p 118 note 68-p 120 note 75, a husband or wife is not a competent attesting witness to a will making the other a beneficiary,<sup>1</sup> although it has been held in at least one jurisdiction that a statutory prohibition against a husband or wife testifying for or against the other in civil actions is not applicable to the probating of a will, which is a "special proceeding" rather than a "civil action."<sup>2</sup> So also, a wife is not a competent witness to a will making her husband a beneficiary where by statute the wife takes half of the estate of the husband of which he was seized during coverture on his death without issue, since she is by virtue of this statute "beneficially interested"<sup>3</sup> However, under various statutes modifying the common-law rule, or providing that a husband or

wife has no interest in property bequeathed to his or her spouse, a husband or wife is now a competent witness to a will by which his or her spouse is made a beneficiary,<sup>4</sup> but these statutes are not to be given a retroactive effect,<sup>5</sup> notwithstanding the language of the statutes, since such a construction would in effect be to recognize the power of the legislature to deprive persons of property rights without due process of law.<sup>6</sup>

The right of the spouse of an attesting or subscribing witness to take under a will is discussed supra § 103.

Release or forfeiture of beneficiary's claim It has been held that the husband or wife of a beneficiary in a will is not rendered competent by the release by the beneficiary of all rights under the will,<sup>7</sup> although the rule is otherwise in some jurisdictions.<sup>8</sup> So in some jurisdictions it is held that the incompetency of husband or wife as an attesting witness to a will by which his or her spouse is made a beneficiary is not removed by statutes which declare void beneficial legacies, devises, or other beneficial interests given by will to attesting witness, and render them competent attesting witnesses,<sup>9</sup> although in others the contrary view has been maintained<sup>10</sup>

Relatives. The fact that a relative of the attesting witness takes under the will does not render the witness incompetent,<sup>11</sup> particularly in a jurisdiction in which an interest, such as would disqualify a witness in another type of proceeding, is held not to disqualify a subscribing witness to a will<sup>12</sup>

e. Spouse or Relative of Testator

The spouse of one making a will is not a competent witness to the will unless statute so provides; but the fact that one is related to the testator does not disqualify him as witness.

In accordance with the common-law rule that husbands and wives could not in any case be admitted as witnesses for or against each other independently of the question of interest,<sup>13</sup> the husband or wife of one making a will is not a competent witness to the will,<sup>14</sup> unless it is otherwise provided by statute<sup>15</sup> Also, in some jurisdictions, a spouse is disqualified from attesting the will of the other spouse, under a statute requiring credible witnesses not beneficially interested under the will<sup>16</sup>

Relatives In the absence of statute providing otherwise, the mere fact that one is related to the testator does not disqualify him from witnessing the will,<sup>17</sup> and his competency to attest the will is not affected by a statute defining rules of construction and providing that, "when a person is required to be disinterested or indifferent in a matter in which other persons are interested, a relationship to either of such persons by consanguinity or affinity within the sixth degree by the rules of the civil law or within the degree of second cousin inclusive, except by the written consent of the par-

f. Executors and Persons Interested through Executors

In most jurisdictions, an executor not otherwise interested in a will is a competent attesting witness, and the competency of persons interested through the executor, such as a spouse, or in the case of a corporation or firm, a stockholder, director, or member, generally depends on the rule applicable to the executor

Subject to exceptions in some jurisdictions, as considered below, as a general rule, in most jurisdictions, an executor not otherwise interested in a will is a competent attesting witness.<sup>19</sup>

Basis or theory of general rule. In many of these jurisdictions the courts proceed on the theory that the office is a mere naked trust<sup>20</sup> More specifically, the rule is based on the theory that the executor takes no beneficial<sup>21</sup> or pecuniary,<sup>22</sup> legal, certain, immediate,<sup>23</sup> present,<sup>24</sup> direct,<sup>25</sup> and vested<sup>26</sup> interest under the will, such as is essential to disqualify him under the test discussed supra subdivision b of this section In addition, the basis of the rule is that the fact that compensation is allowed him by statute for his services is not such an interest as will disqualify him to attest the will,<sup>27</sup> because the benefits which accrue to him are derived not from the will but from the statute providing the compensation,<sup>28</sup> and because the right to commissions does not accrue until the performance of the services and does not take effect by relation to the time of attestation<sup>29</sup> Under this view, the rule is not changed by a statute providing that no person examined as a witness concerning the execution of a will shall after such examination receive any benefit from any appointment made to him by such will, since the word "appointment" necessarily refers to some appointment coupled with a beneficial interest<sup>30</sup>

In other jurisdictions, where the executor is held to be a competent attesting witness, the decisions are based on special statutory provisions which make parties who take an interest under a will competent witnesses to prove it,<sup>31</sup> or which make a person interested in the event of the suit, or matter to be determined, competent as a witness,<sup>32</sup> or which render the appointment of an executor void where he is also an attesting witness,<sup>33</sup> or which make all persons competent to attest a will except such as are excepted therein, executors not being named among the persons excepted<sup>34</sup>

Executor held incompetent as attesting witness In some jurisdictions the rule in respect of the competency of executors as attesting witnesses is not in accord with that heretofore stated, as where it is held that, by reason of the fact that the local statute provides for commissions for the executor, he has such a direct financial interest in the probate of the will as to disqualify him by reason of such interest<sup>35</sup> Under this view, the competency of an executor is placed in the same class as that of a legatee or devisee<sup>36</sup> Nevertheless, by provisions of another local statute, he may be compelled, if his testimony is needed, to resign his executorship and testify as to the execution of the will<sup>37</sup>

petent to attest a will of real estate,<sup>38</sup> but not a will of personal estate because the statutes of these states give an executor commissions on the personality;<sup>39</sup> and it has further been held that the competency of the executor is not restored by the Statute of 25 George II c 6 in force in one of these states because the statute has no application to wills of personal property<sup>40</sup> In accordance with principles considered supra subdivision a of this section, he is not a competent witness although he renounces his executorship,<sup>41</sup> or releases all right to commissions<sup>42</sup>

Wives of executors In jurisdictions where an executor is a competent witness to a will, the wife of an executor is a competent witness<sup>43</sup> However, in jurisdictions where the executor is not a competent witness, neither is his wife,<sup>44</sup> nor is she rendered competent by the renunciation by her husband of the trust<sup>45</sup>

Stockholder, officer, director, or member of firms or corporations appointed executors In jurisdictions where executors are held competent as attesting witnesses, a stockholder,<sup>46</sup> or a stockholder and director,<sup>47</sup> or officer,<sup>48</sup> of a corporation appointed executor is also a competent witness to the will

On the other hand, in jurisdictions where an executor is not a competent attesting witness, a stockholder of a corporation appointed executor of a will,<sup>49</sup> or an officer thereof,<sup>50</sup> is not a competent attesting witness, although like executors, he may be compelled to testify to a will in which event the appointment as executor will be void<sup>51</sup> Where executors were members of a firm to which an attesting witness belonged and they agreed that all fees earned by any member of the firm in any trust

relation should accrue to the firm, such witness was disqualified by interest to attest the will,<sup>52</sup> nor would his subsequent release of all interest in the office of the executor in managing the estate qualify him so as to sustain the will,<sup>53</sup> since so far as pecuniary interest is concerned, it is the same as that of an executor<sup>54</sup>

Employees of executors The fact that the witnesses to a will were employed by the executor does not render them incompetent or alter their position as credible witnesses required by the statute<sup>55</sup> Thus, an employee of a corporation is a disinterested witness to the execution of a will, in which the corporation was named as executor of a fund, the income of which was bequeathed to charity,<sup>56</sup> and even assuming that an executor had a disqualifying interest by reason of some discretionary powers exercisable under the terms of the will, employees of the executor would be competent attesting witnesses, since their interest as such would be in no sense proprietary and would be too indefinite, uncertain, remote, and contingent to affect their competency as witnesses<sup>57</sup>

g. Trustees and Persons Interested through Trustees

In most jurisdictions a trustee named by the will, who has no further interest than compensation for acting as such, is a competent attesting witness, and the competency of stockholders, officers, and directors of a corporate trustee depends on the rule applicable to the trustee.

As in the case of executors, taking no interest under the will, discussed supra subdivision f of this section, it is the general rule, subject to exceptions in some jurisdictions,<sup>59</sup> that a trustee named by the will, who takes no beneficial interest under it, is a competent attesting witness,<sup>60</sup> and that a trustee who has no further interest than compensation for acting as such is not thereby rendered incompetent to act as an attesting witness<sup>61</sup>

Particular interest of trustee In accordance with the principles governing the determination of what constitutes interest, discussed supra subdivision b of this section, a trustee is not an interested witness where, by provisions of the will creating the trust, the trustee is to pay over dividends on certain stock only on performance by the beneficiary of designated conditions,<sup>62</sup> because the interest which disqualifies a witness from attesting the will must be a present, certain, and vested one, not uncertain, remote, or contingent<sup>63</sup> On the other hand, a trustee is not "disinterested" where the powers given him are not the usual duties imposed on a trustee, but he is given unlimited discretion to allot the income among such charities as to him may seem wise.<sup>64</sup>

Stockholders, directors, and officers Where a trustee is regarded as a competent witness, a stockholder in a corporation named as trustee,<sup>65</sup> or a stockholder and director therein,<sup>66</sup> or a stockholder and officer,<sup>67</sup> or a stockholder, treasurer, and trust officer,<sup>68</sup> is a competent witness, but where the interest of a corporate trustee is such that it would not be regarded as a competent witness, neither its managers or officers, nor its stockholders will be regarded as competent attesting witnesses,<sup>69</sup> the same

b. Persons Interested through Corporate Beneficiaries

- (1) In general
- (2) Persons interested through municipal beneficiaries
- (3) Persons interested through charitable or religious associations

(1) In General

Employees of a corporation which is a beneficiary under a will are not incompetent as attesting witnesses.

In accordance with the rules governing the determination of what constitutes interest with respect to the competence of an attesting witness, discussed supra subdivision b of this section, it has been held that the employees of a corporation which is a beneficiary under the will are not incompetent as attesting witnesses,<sup>73</sup> since their interest in the will is not sufficiently present, certain, definite, and vested<sup>74</sup>

(2) Persons Interested through Municipal Beneficiaries

Generally residents and taxpayers of a municipal corporation are competent attesting witnesses to a will making a devise or bequest to the municipality.

While there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>75</sup> it is very generally held that an inhabitant or taxpayer of a municipal corporation is a competent witness to a will making a devise or bequest to such municipality for charitable, religious, or educational purposes<sup>76</sup> The interest of the taxpayer in the gift it has been said is not certain and direct,<sup>77</sup> and vested,<sup>78</sup> but is so contingent and remote that it does not disqualify him as a witness<sup>79</sup>

(3) Persons Interested through Charitable or Religious Associations

Subject to some exceptions, membership or similar interest in an educational, religious, or charitable corporation or association does not ordinarily disqualify one from acting as attesting witness to a will making a gift to such corporation or society

Membership in an educational, religious, or charitable corporation or association is not ordinarily held to disqualify the member from acting as witness to a will making a gift to such corporation or society to be applied to the uses for which it was organized,<sup>80</sup> and it has been held that the fact that the member may have a contingent interest in the property thereof on its possible dissolution does not affect the rule<sup>81</sup> At most the fact of membership goes only to the credibility of the witness<sup>82</sup> The interest of such witness, it is said, is not a present, direct, certain, and vested pecuniary interest,<sup>83</sup> which, as appears supra subdivision b of this section, is necessary for the purpose of disqualifying an attesting witness

Under statutes which render void devises or legacies to witnesses to wills and make a devisee or legatee a competent witness to the will, discussed supra subdivision c of this section, a bequest to a religious institution is not rendered invalid because it was attested by a priest who received a bequest for the saying of masses for the testator<sup>84</sup>

Statutes expressly relating to religious or charitable gifts. It has been held under a statute requiring a will making a bequest or devise to any body politic or to any person in trust for religious or charitable uses to be attested by two credible, and at the same time, disinterested, witnesses, that one who at the time of attesting the will had an interest in a charitable or religious institution to be benefited by the will is not a competent attesting witness,<sup>85</sup> and, while the disqualifying interest must be certain,<sup>86</sup> it is not essential that such interest be a matter of personal benefit to the witness in order to disqualify him.<sup>87</sup> Such a statute disqualifies those who have charge of, and are responsible for, the business and financial affairs of the institution.<sup>88</sup> However, a member of an advisory board provided for by the will to assist the trustee named therein in managing the charity provided for is a competent attesting witness,<sup>89</sup> as is also a lay member of a church who can do nothing which will divert the church property from the uses with which it is impressed, although he is a member with the right to vote in the conduct of its affairs,<sup>90</sup> and a ruling elder of a church whose duties in connection with the church were limited to matters of doctrine and discipline, and who had no voice in the management of the church property,<sup>91</sup> and, since it is essential, in order to disqualify an attesting witness, that his incompetency should have existed at the time of the execution of the will, as appears supra subdivision a of this section, one who was not a director at the time of attesting the will, because the charity provided for was not then incorporated, is a competent attesting witness.<sup>92</sup>

In accordance with principles governing the determination of interest, considered supra subdivision b of this section, a witness is not disqualified by reason of interest in the charity where such interest is remote, uncertain, and contingent, and not a vested, certain, and present one.<sup>93</sup> Hence, one who does not possess but merely has a capacity of obtaining the legal right to share in the benefits of a charitable bequest is a competent attesting witness.<sup>94</sup> It has also been held that one is a competent witness to a will who contributes to a charity for which the will provides a legacy,<sup>95</sup> or who as a matter of public spirit or public interest was captain of a team to collect funds for a charitable corporation to which a bequest was made,<sup>96</sup> or who took a general friendly interest therein,<sup>97</sup> and that an employee of a charitable institution to which property has been bequeathed is a competent witness to the will.<sup>98</sup>

Formerly, a charitable bequest in a will was defeated where one of the attesting witnesses was a legatee under the will, although not interested in the charitable gift,<sup>99</sup> the view being taken that an interest in any part of the will is such as will disqualify the witness for the purpose of attestation.<sup>1</sup> However, by an amendment of the statute defining a disinterested witness as one "not interested in such religious or charitable use," and providing that the act is not intended to apply to a witness interested in some other devise, bequest, or gift in the same instrument, the fact that one of the attesting witnesses was interested in certain of the charities provided for by the will does not vitiate bequests to charities in which the witness was not interested.<sup>2</sup> This amendment, however, has no retroactive effect.<sup>3</sup>

Guarantor of mortgage It has been held that, where a bequest is made to a church on condition that it be applied to the reduction of a mortgage on the church property, a guarantor of the mortgage note by reason of direct pecuniary interest is not a competent witness to the will,<sup>4</sup> although the amount due on the note is small and greatly exceeded by the value of the mortgaged property.<sup>5</sup>

has been adjudicated with respect to various persons interested or connected with the will or the estate in some way <sup>6</sup>

Guardians There is some diversity of opinion on the question of whether a guardian of a beneficiary under a will is a competent attesting witness to the will. Thus, it has been held that he has no such interest under the will as will disqualify him,<sup>7</sup> and the competency of a guardian as an attesting witness has been upheld under a statute removing incompetency of interested witnesses.<sup>8</sup> On the other hand, it was held without discussion or statement of reasons in a memorandum decision of a federal court that a guardian is not a competent attesting witness to a will.<sup>9</sup>

Heirs An heir at law of a testator, who is disinherited by the will either in whole or in part, is a competent witness to attest the will,<sup>10</sup> because the interest which will disqualify a witness is a beneficial interest,<sup>11</sup> and because it is against the interest of the heir, in these circumstances, to support the will.<sup>12</sup> There is also authority to the effect that an heir is a competent witness to the will as having at the time of attestation no interest in the lands devised because the testator could have alienated the land and might have married and had issue, which would have destroyed any possibility which the witness had of inheriting the lands.<sup>13</sup>

j. Judicial and Administrative Officers; Attorneys

A probate judge may be an attesting witness, as may officers who executed acknowledgments of the signature of the testator or the witnesses, and attorneys of the testator or one who drew his will.

A judge of probate is a competent attesting witness to a will,<sup>14</sup> and his act in attesting the will does not divest him of jurisdiction of proceedings for the probate thereof,<sup>15</sup> even conceding his incapacity to testify when the will is presented for probate before himself.<sup>16</sup>

A register of wills is competent to testify as an attesting witness to a will, although disqualified by organic law to probate it, and he may testify as an attesting witness to the probate of the will in another tribunal having jurisdiction.<sup>17</sup>

An attorney employed and acting as the legal adviser of the testator,<sup>24</sup> or who drew the will under his instructions,<sup>25</sup> is a competent attesting witness.

§ 186. — Request of Testator for Attestation and Subscription

- a Necessity
- b Requisites and sufficiency

a. Necessity

As a general rule, attestation and subscription by witnesses is required to be at the request of the testator.

It is a rule of general application that attestation and subscription by witnesses shall be at the request of the testator,<sup>27</sup> and this is so both under statutes containing an express requirement to that effect,<sup>28</sup> and under statutes which contain no such requirement, but which provide for "attestation" or "attestation and subscription" in the presence of the testator,<sup>29</sup> or that the will shall be "witnessed" by two competent persons<sup>30</sup> However, it has been held in some jurisdictions not containing an express statutory requirement to that effect, that a will does not fail merely because it was subscribed by the witness voluntarily, rather than at the request of the testator<sup>31</sup>

The object of the statutory requirement is that an officious signing by witnesses, without any privity of the testator, should not be recognized as sufficient<sup>32</sup>

b. Requisites and Sufficiency

- (1) In general
- (2) Request by third person

(1) In General

It is not necessary that the request be formal or that it be made at any particular time, nor need it be expressly made, it being sufficient that a request may be implied from the conduct of the testator or the circumstances attending the transaction

To satisfy the requirement that attestation and subscription by witnesses shall be at the request of the testator, no formal or particular form of request is necessary,<sup>33</sup> it being immaterial how the request is conveyed to the witnesses as long as it appears that there was such a request,<sup>34</sup> and that it was the free and intelligent act of the testator<sup>35</sup> Moreover, it is not essential that an express request be made, but it will be sufficient that it may be implied,<sup>36</sup> and it may be implied from the acts

Failure to use word "witness"

Fact that testator, when requesting one who witnessed execution of will to sign same, failed to use the word "witness" in requesting signature, or that testator may have been under mistaken belief that witness who is also named as executor, must sign will, did not preclude existence of sufficient authentication, since no proof of any specific intent on part of testator with respect to particular capacity in which witness signed is necessary if formalities have been observed by witness or conduct of the testator,<sup>37</sup> and from the facts and circumstances attending the transaction<sup>38</sup>

In accordance with the above rules, the requirement that the testator must have requested the witnesses to sign has been held to have been satisfied by his asking that the witnesses be sent for to attest the execution of the will,<sup>39</sup> by their signing the will in his presence and with his knowledge and without objection on his part,<sup>40</sup> especially when the testator knew that the witnesses were present for that purpose,<sup>41</sup> or is shown to have been seeking witnesses to attest his will,<sup>42</sup> by affirmative response by word or act to a question as to whether the testator wanted the will attested,<sup>43</sup> by the reading of the attestation clause in the testator's presence after signing by the witnesses,<sup>44</sup> or by any other act or conduct on the part of the testator, or other evidence which would show that the testator had knowledge of the attestation and consented thereto or acquiesced therein.<sup>45</sup> However, the mere physical presence of the testator during the signing by the witnesses is not of itself necessarily a compliance with the statutory requirement.<sup>46</sup>

the publication of a will are distinct acts in their nature, their performance may be joint or connected, and a single sentence uttered by the testator may import both a request to attest the execution and a publication.<sup>47</sup>

A request made through the medium of an interpreter that witnesses attest the execution of a will is a sufficient request,<sup>48</sup> especially where testimony that the testator's language was correctly interpreted was corroborated by circumstances and other evidence.<sup>49</sup>

Summoning of witnesses by legatee does not affect the validity of the execution of the will where the testator requested the witnesses to sign it as such.<sup>50</sup>

Request made to only one witness A request by the testator that one witness sign the will is a sufficient request for both when made in the presence of the other and when both witnesses were sent for by the testator,<sup>51</sup> or where the request was made by the testator in the presence of both witnesses and communicated by the witness to whom the request was made to the other witness.<sup>52</sup> It has been held that, where the testator requested one witness in the presence of the other to witness his will, and after signing it requested each of them to sign it, there was a sufficient request to witness it.<sup>53</sup>

Time of making request The request to witnesses to attest a will may be made before the testator has signed the will,<sup>54</sup> while he is signing it,<sup>55</sup> or after the witnesses have signed it, where these acts are parts of the same transaction.<sup>56</sup> It has been held that a request to a witness to attest a will made on a day previous to the execution will be sufficient where the witness was present at the time the will was prepared, heard it read, heard the other witness requested to sign, and signed himself in the presence of the testator.<sup>57</sup>

(2) Request by Third Person

The request for attestation of the will need not be made by the testator personally, but may be made by a third person if authorized by, or done with the knowledge and acquiescence of, the testator.

Generally, a request for subscribing witnesses to attest a will must be made by the testator or some one acting for him and in his presence.<sup>58</sup> Accordingly, it is not essential that the request be made by the testator himself, and it may be made by the draftsman of the will, the testator's attorney, professional advisor, or physician, a person superintending the execution of the will, one of the witnesses, or any other person present at the time of the execution of the will, provided this is authorized by, or done with the knowledge and acquiescence of, the testator.<sup>59</sup> Not even an act or motion indicating acquiescence by the testator in the request to the witnesses is necessary, where it is made in his presence, and he knows that the witnesses are signing in response to such request, and makes no objection, since under the circumstances his silence is a sufficient indication that the request is by his authority.<sup>60</sup>

Mental capacity of testator. Unless it appears that at the time a third person requested witnesses to sign the testator's will he knew of, and was mentally capable of understanding, the request, his acquiescence therein cannot be implied from his

b. Necessity and Purpose

Under statutes so requiring, but not otherwise, the testator must publish or declare the instrument to be his will to the attesting witnesses, so that it may be manifest that he knows what he is executing and to secure him against fraud.

It is a rule of general application that, in the absence of a statute requiring it, it is not necessary that the testator should publish his will,<sup>67</sup> or that the witnesses should know at the time they attested the will that the instrument was a will.<sup>68</sup> Moreover, it has very generally been held that publication of a will, or knowledge on the part of the witnesses that the instrument is a will, is not made necessary by statutes providing that wills shall be attested and subscribed by witnesses,<sup>69</sup> or requiring that the signature shall be made or the will acknowledged in the presence of witnesses.<sup>70</sup>

On the other hand, in many jurisdictions statutes now require that the testator publish or declare the instrument to be his will to the attesting witnesses at the time of attestation,<sup>71</sup> and that a witness to the execution of a will must be conscious of the fact that he is such a witness at the time of the execution of the will <sup>72</sup>

Purpose of requirement. The principal purpose of the requirement that the testator publish or declare his will, where such requirement exists, is that it may be manifest that the testator knows what he is executing, <sup>73</sup> and to secure him against fraud and imposition <sup>74</sup> Stated otherwise, the reason for requiring publication is twofold: First, to furnish proof that the testator is under no misapprehension, whether by malicious contrivance or otherwise, as to the nature or identity of the instrument, <sup>75</sup> and, second, to impress on the witnesses the fact that, since the document is a will, they are expected to remember what occurred at its execution and be ready to vouch for its validity in court. <sup>76</sup>

Knowledge of witnesses as substitute for publication In general, it is imperative that the witnesses, at the time they attest, be informed in some way by the testator himself that the instrument he has subscribed is his will, and knowledge of this fact, derived from any other source or at any other time, will not suffice <sup>77</sup> Thus, the ascertainment by the subscribing witnesses of the testamentary nature of the paper must not be conjectural or derived from accidental inspection, and the testamentary declaration must be open, and manifest, and intentional <sup>78</sup> However, it was held that there was a sufficient publication where a witness refused to sign the instrument without knowledge of its contents and thereupon was given the instrument by the testator and ascertained that it was his will, <sup>79</sup> and it has been held that where publication is not expressly required by the statute, an attestation is sufficient where it is shown that, notwithstanding the failure of deceased to declare the will to be his, the attesting witnesses knew that the paper subscribed by them was the will of decedent <sup>80</sup>

Connotation of statute

Under statute requiring that will be in writing signed by testator and attested by two competent witnesses subscribing their names, witnessing of will connotes something more than mere attestation of an act or genuineness of signature, and embraces the attestation that writing is the will of testator, and accordingly witnesses must know, at the time, that they are attesting testator's will

Continuity of legislative and judicial requirement

Where legislature, cognizant of unbroken line of judicial decisions requiring compliance with each statutory formality with respect to conditions of admission of purported wills to probate had continued statutory requirements unchanged, that legislature at other times did not require publication of wills gave no warrant to ignore the legislative command actions is necessary, and communication by word, act, or conduct, may be sufficient.

Where a statute provides that a will must have been published by the testator, the requirement demands that the testator must understand that the instrument which he is about to execute is a testamentary disposition of his property,<sup>81</sup> and he must, at the time, communicate to witnesses that he does so understand it.<sup>82</sup> However, to constitute a valid publication of a will, no particular form of words or actions is necessary,<sup>83</sup> a substantial compliance with the statutory requirements in this regard being sufficient.<sup>84</sup>

Any communication to the witnesses, either by word, act, signs, or conduct, which makes it certain that the testator means the paper which he signs to be his will, is sufficient.<sup>85</sup> It is, however, absolutely essential that it be made to appear unequivocally that the testamentary character of the instrument was communicated by the testator to the witnesses,<sup>86</sup> and that as between the testator and the witnesses there was some meeting of the minds on the understanding that the instrument was the will of the testator,<sup>87</sup> and the requirement of publication is not satisfied simply by the subscription or acknowledgment by the testator in the presence of the attesting witnesses.<sup>88</sup>

The fact of publication may be inferred or not from all the circumstances attending the execution of the will,<sup>89</sup> and depends on the peculiar circumstances of each case.<sup>90</sup>

There is a sufficient publication where the testator declares in the presence of the witnesses that the instrument is his will,<sup>91</sup> where he declares the instrument is his will in the presence of witnesses and asks them to sign it as witnesses,<sup>92</sup> where he states to the witnesses that he has written out a paper so that his matters could be attended to in case anything happened to him<sup>93</sup> or makes similar statements,<sup>94</sup> where he replies in the affirmative to a question asked him as to whether the instrument is his will,<sup>95</sup> where he responds affirmatively to a statement describing the document as a testamentary instrument,<sup>96</sup> where he requests persons present to witness his will,<sup>97</sup> where he replies in the affirmative to a question as to whether he wants persons present to witness his will,<sup>98</sup> where he acquiesces in the statements or request of another acting in his behalf,<sup>99</sup> where he makes a scroll or seal after his signature to the will in the presence of the witnesses,<sup>1</sup> where he requests witnesses to sign the will and takes steps to have the will deposited with the county judge,<sup>2</sup> or where a testator unable to speak at all, or only with difficulty, communicates by signs or by words, to some unintelligible, that the paper being executed is a will<sup>3</sup>

There is also a sufficient publication where the will is read to the testator in the presence of the witnesses, and the testator indicates his approval of it,<sup>4</sup> or where the witness was requested to sign the instrument at the testator's instance, and the instrument bore on its face evidences of a testa-

There is not a sufficient publication where the words or conduct of the testator in the particular circumstances cannot be reasonably interpreted as communicating the instrument as a last will<sup>8</sup> A fortiori, there is no publication where the testator purposely withholds from the witnesses the fact that the document signed was a will<sup>9</sup> The conduct of a deaf testator in nodding his head to a written declaration that the instrument was a will was held not to constitute a valid publication where one of the witnesses saw the nod to the paper containing the declaration but was ignorant of its contents and the other witness, aware of the declaration, saw no nod, although looking<sup>10</sup>

(1) Where deceased at time of execution of instrument asked bank safe deposit vault guards to witness his signature and stated that he was going on a trip and that he had some instructions to be carried out if anything happened to him, neither deceased's statements, the surrounding circumstances nor relationship of vault guards to deceased necessarily informed guards, who did not know character of instrument, that instrument was a will, and hence there was no publication of instrument necessary for probate as will

(2) Time of Publication

Publication may be made before, during or after the signing of the instrument by the testator, but must be made before the signing by the witnesses

It is well settled that the time when the testator declares the document to be his will in relation to the time when he signs is of no importance,<sup>11</sup> and therefore such publication or declaration may be made before signing, while in the act of signing, or after signing, as long as it is done on "the same occasion and as a part of the same transaction."<sup>12</sup> What constitutes "the same occasion and the same transaction" is a matter of judicial determination in each particular case, dependent on the facts thereof and incapable of being governed by any general rule.<sup>13</sup> Thus, the publication of the will to the second witness some three weeks after its execution in the presence of the first witness was a proper publication,<sup>14</sup> and on the other hand it was held not sufficient that the testator on a subsequent occasion, several weeks after its execution, stated to the witnesses that the instrument signed by him was his will.<sup>15</sup>

In relation to signing by witness In general, the requirement is that the publication or declaration be made before the signing by the witnesses,<sup>16</sup> and the attempt of the testator to complete the will after he and the witnesses have signed it, without republication, renders the will void.<sup>17</sup> However, there is a sufficient compliance with the statute in reference to the execution of wills, where the declaration and acknowledgment are made before the witness has completed his signature as an attesting witness and on the same occasion.<sup>18</sup>

may be made to the witnesses at different times and when they are apart from each other.<sup>19</sup>

Completeness of publication at time of executing will It is not essential to a valid publication that the words or acts of publication be at the time complete in and of themselves, but it is sufficient if the publication is made definite and complete by reference on the part of the testator to a former conversation between him and the witnesses.<sup>20</sup>

(3) Other Considerations

Publication must be made to the number of witnesses required by statute, but it is not necessary that the witnesses should know the contents or provisions of the will.

In addition to the requirements with respect to the time of publication, discussed supra subdivision c(2) of this section, various other elements have been considered in connection with the requirement in some jurisdictions that a will must be published by the testator.<sup>21</sup> Thus, there is no publication unless the witnesses are cognizant of it,<sup>22</sup> and a person who, from inattention or abstraction, is unconscious of what is being done and said when a will is published does not witness it and cannot testify that it is published.<sup>23</sup>

Number of witnesses to whom publication made Publication must be made to the number of witnesses required by statute<sup>24</sup> or the will cannot be admitted to probate.<sup>25</sup> Where one of the attesting witnesses did not know that the instrument was intended by the testator as his will the instrument is insufficient and not admissible to probate,<sup>26</sup> and if one of the necessary witnesses does not understand the language of the testator and the declaration for publication by the testator must be translated to him,

26. Instrument entitled "will"

Where one of the attesting witnesses to an instrument offered by nephew and sister did not know that instrument, which had the word "Will" written at top of page, was intended by testator as his will, instrument was not executed as required by statute and could not be admitted to probate.

Cal.—In re Norswing's Estate, 118 P.2d 858, 47 Cal. App. 2d 730.

the statutory requirement is not satisfied, and the will is void<sup>27</sup> If, however, the number of witnesses required by statute understood from the declaration that the instrument was his will, the requirements are satisfied, although another attesting witness did not understand the language in which the declaration was made<sup>28</sup>

Knowledge of witnesses of contents of will
Whether or not publication of a will is required, it is not necessary that the witnesses should read or know the contents or provisions of the will,<sup>29</sup> in the absence of a statutory requirement to that effect<sup>30</sup> Thus, it is not necessary that a will be read to or by the testator in the presence of the witnesses<sup>31</sup> Indeed it is rarely the case that a witness is informed of the contents of an instrument which he attests,<sup>32</sup> as most testators desire to have the contents of their will remain unknown until it is presented for probate,<sup>33</sup> and, as has been said, inquiry by a subscribing witness as to the contents of the will would be considered a most impertinent and offensive curiosity<sup>34</sup>

Want of publication or defective publication as affected by attestation clause Recitals in a formal and perfectly executed attestation clause are not sufficient to show due execution of the will where there is positive evidence that there was no publication or that the publication was defective,<sup>35</sup> especially where the contents of the attestation were not made known to one of the witnesses signing it<sup>36</sup>

§ 188. — Signing or Acknowledging Signature or Will by Testator in Presence of Witnesses

- a Necessity
- b Requisites and sufficiency of signing
- c Requisites and sufficiency of acknowledgment
- d Number of witnesses to signature or acknowledgment

a. Necessity

Subject to some exceptions, it is commonly held that the testator is required either to sign the will in the presence of the witnesses or, in the alternative, to acknowledge to them his signature or his will

Except as appears below, it is the general rule, under statutes expressly so providing, or so construed or applied, that the requirement is that the testator either sign the will in the presence of the witnesses, or, in the alternative, acknowledge to them, in some jurisdictions, his "signature,"<sup>37</sup> or,

Under the above rules, it is not necessary to the validity of the execution of the will that both of the acts mentioned in the statutes or decisions should be performed<sup>42</sup> Thus, it has very generally been held that the statutory requirements are satisfied where the testator signs in the presence of wit-

Acknowledgment by testatrix to subscribing witnesses to will that testatrix had previously signed the will was not equivalent to signing the will in presence of witnesses as required by statute

Utah—In re Alexander's Estate, supra

"Personal knowledge" of witnesses

Under statute requiring that a will be attested by two or more competent witnesses, a "witness" is one who has personal knowledge of some fact or transaction, that is, that the will was signed by the testator or testatrix or by some other person under his or her direction in his or her presence, and where the two persons who signed as witnesses had not seen decedent sign the will or any one sign for him, witnesses did not have requisite personal knowledge as to genuineness of signature on will, and, hence, will was not relating to the execution of wills expressly requires that the witnesses shall "see the testator sign the will, or some one sign it for him at his request,"<sup>49</sup> and it has been held that this statute has not been repealed by later legislation relating to the execution of wills<sup>50</sup> Similarly, in the Philippines the rule is absolute that one who makes a will must sign his name in the presence of the witnesses,<sup>51</sup> and it was said that while the first part of the statute regulating the subject does not expressly require that the testator sign the will in the presence of the attesting witnesses, the second part thereof does require that fact to appear in the attestation clause<sup>52</sup>

There is some difference of opinion as to whether the witnesses must actually see the testator write his name in order to satisfy the requirement that the signing be in their presence

While some authorities require that, in order to constitute a signing of a will within the presence of the witnesses, the witnesses must actually see the testator write his name, or have their attention directed to the actual signing while it was taking place,<sup>53</sup> it has been held that if the will is signed in the presence of the witnesses who have adequate opportunity to see the testator sign, the statutory requirements are satisfied, even though they may not have actually seen him sign, by reason of inattention or other cause,<sup>54</sup> as where one of the witnesses refrained from looking at the testator while signing for fear it would make him nervous<sup>55</sup> The signing will be considered as having taken place in the presence of a witness, although he was in an adjoining room, if from such a position he could see the testator sign after his attention had been drawn to what was going on<sup>56</sup>

Signing by third person of testator's name at his request and in the presence of the witnesses may be a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirements<sup>57</sup>

Necessity for seeing signature. It has been held that if a testator signs his will in the presence of attesting witnesses who saw him in the act of writing, attestation by them is good although they do not see his signature and although the testator does not acknowledge it<sup>58</sup>

c. Requisites and Sufficiency of Acknowledgment

- (1) In general
- (2) Acknowledgment that instrument is will
- (3) Request to witnesses to sign
- (4) Seeing or opportunity to see signature
- (5) Time of acknowledgment

(1) In General

It is not necessary that the acknowledgment be in any particular formal words, or in words at all, provided the testator indicates to the witnesses with unmistakable certainty that the signature is his or that the instrument is his act

If the will was not signed by the testator in the presence of witnesses, he must make known to them in some manner that his name appearing on the instrument was signed thereto by him,<sup>59</sup> or he should in some way acknowledge the instrument to them as his act, where this form of acknowledgment is per-

"attested" within statute requiring attestation by two or more competent witnesses

Conscious presence

The phrase "in the presence of," as used in statute requiring that will be subscribed or acknowledged by testator in presence of both attesting witnesses at same time, means conscious presence, not merely actual physical presence of witness without realization of what is transpiring, and is not synonymous with witness' being in same room as testator and another witness at time of their signatures of will

missible.<sup>60</sup> However, it is not necessary that the acknowledgment be in any particular formal words, or in words at all, but may be by acts or conduct, provided the testator indicates to the witnesses, with unmistakable certainty, that the signature is his,<sup>61</sup> or that the instrument is his act,<sup>62</sup> and this is the rule even where the statute provides that the will shall be attested by witnesses who "saw the testator subscribe or heard him acknowledge the same."<sup>63</sup>

In any event, where the testator acknowledges his signature in some way other than by spoken words, the acknowledgment must be made in some unmistakable manner.<sup>64</sup> A signature which is not identified to the attesting witnesses by the testator cannot be said to have been acknowledged by him as required by statute.<sup>65</sup>

Acknowledgment of mark or subscription by third person Where the signing is by mark, or the testator's name is subscribed to the will by another at his request, in the presence of witnesses, an acknowledgment by him to the witnesses that he had so executed the will is a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirements.<sup>66</sup> However, where the circumstances of the signing by mark, and the subscription of the name of the testator by a third person, are unknown to the witnesses, an acknowledgment by the testator is not sufficient to establish a proper execution of the will where there are specific statutory requirements with respect to signing by mark.<sup>67</sup> Certainly, where a testator lapses into unconsciousness after giving directions to another to sign the will for him and is never conscious of the fact that it was signed, there can be no acknowledgment of the signature.<sup>68</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that even though the subscription of the name of the testator by a third person is not done in the presence of the witnesses, the subscription may be properly attested where the testator acknowledges to the witnesses that the instrument is his will and expresses his testamentary intentions.<sup>69</sup>

Acknowledgment through Third Person It is not necessary that the testator should by his own words acknowledge the signature, but the words of acknowledgment may proceed from another and will be regarded as those of the testator if the circumstances show that he adopted them and the person

Necessary conditions held not established

not meet statutory requirement that, where will is executed by a mark and name of testatrix written by another person, the name be subscribed in testatrix' presence and by her direction and authority, since the acknowledgment amounts merely to a statement involving a conclusion of law and does not establish the existence of the facts and fulfillment of the conditions on which the validity of will depends

Where one witness subscribed decedent's name to will in decedent's presence and at her request and decedent then made her mark thereon in absence of any other person, and where several days later decedent asked two other persons to sign paper and they signed at designated place on paper so folded that they did not see contents or name or mark of decedent and they were not informed that they were signing a will, the instrument could not be probated as a will notwithstanding testatrix subsequently acknowledged that instrument was her will

A declaration by the testator to the witnesses that the instrument is his will is generally considered to be a sufficient acknowledgment of his signature,<sup>71</sup> and a will is validly "attested" by a witness in the presence of the testator if the testator acknowledges the signature previously placed thereon by exhibiting the paper to the witness and declaring it to be his will.<sup>72</sup> Thus, the acknowledgment of an instrument as a will imports an acknowledgment of the signature, under a statute which requires that the will be subscribed by the testator and attested and subscribed in his presence by witnesses, who saw the testator subscribe or heard him acknowledge the same,<sup>73</sup> or under a statute which provides that the subscription must be made in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or be acknowledged by the testator to them to have been made by him or by his authority.<sup>74</sup>

On the other hand, a mere declaration or acknowledgment that a paper is the testator's will is not an acknowledgment of his signature under a statute which not only requires an acknowledgment of the signature, but also an acknowledgment of the will,<sup>75</sup> the view being taken that it is the subscrip-

(3) Request to Witnesses to Sign

A mere request by the testator to witness an instrument or the signature thereto may be a sufficient acknowledgment of the will or the signature.

Except in so far as appears infra subdivision c (4) of this section, the courts have generally held or said that a mere request by the testator to witness an instrument or the signature thereto is a sufficient acknowledgment of the will or signature to satisfy the requirements of the statute.<sup>77</sup> Thus, a mere request by the testator to witnesses to attest his will is a sufficient acknowledgment of his signature under a statute which requires signing by the testator in the presence of the witnesses or an acknowledgment by him that it is his act or deed,<sup>78</sup> or under a statute providing that the subscription must be made, or the testator must acknowledge it to have been made by him or by his authority, in the presence of the attesting witnesses,<sup>79</sup> and under a statute providing that subscription shall be made or "the will acknowledged" by the testator in the presence of the witnesses, the acknowledgment of a will has been implied from a request to witnesses to attest the signature.<sup>80</sup> Even where the statute requires both an acknowledgment of the signature and an acknowledgment of the will, the words of the testator asking the witnesses to sign as witnesses to his will may constitute an acknowledgment of his signature.<sup>81</sup>

Where testator had signed will outside of presence of witnesses, but presented will to them for their signatures stating it was his will, and one witness read it aloud in the presence of testator and other witness, and then both witnesses signed will in testator's presence, testator had sufficiently indicated to witnesses that document was his will, and that signature was his signature

It is not essential that the testator expressly request the witnesses to attest the instrument in order to effect a valid acknowledgment thereof, where the circumstances are such as to effect an implied request<sup>82</sup>

Request to sign instrument signature of which is visible Under statutes providing that subscription must be made by the testator in the presence of the witnesses or acknowledged by him to have been so made, where the testator requests witnesses to subscribe their names to an instrument not executed in their presence,<sup>83</sup> or executed in the presence of less than the number required by statute,<sup>84</sup> which instrument he declares to be his will, and the signature is plainly visible on the instrument, there is a sufficient acknowledgment of the signature. Even where the testator does not acknowledge the nature of the instrument, such a request is a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirements where the witnesses can see the document and the signature,<sup>85</sup> since the production of the instrument and the request that the witnesses sign import that the signature is that of the testator and that he acknowledges the signature to be his.<sup>86</sup>

(4) Seeing or Opportunity to See Signature

Authorities differ as to whether, where a testator acknowledges an instrument which he has already signed, it is essential that the witnesses should see or be given an opportunity to see his signature.

tator is already on the will, and he acknowledges the instrument as his will to the witnesses, it is not essential that the witnesses should see or be given an opportunity to see his signature,<sup>87</sup> at least in the absence of any attempt to conceal the writing.<sup>88</sup> Such is the rule under a statute which requires signing by the testator in the presence of the witnesses or an acknowledgment by him that it is his act or deed,<sup>89</sup> or under a statute which provides that the subscription must be made in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or be acknowledged by the testator to them to have been made by him or by his authority,<sup>90</sup> or a statute providing that subscription shall be made or "the will acknowledged" by the testator in the presence of the witnesses.<sup>91</sup>

On the other hand, in some jurisdictions in order that there may be a valid acknowledgment of the signature, the witnesses must see the signature or be given an opportunity to see it.<sup>92</sup> Thus, it has been held that the witnesses must see or be given an opportunity to see the signature of the testator in order to constitute a valid acknowledgment under a statute providing that subscription of a will shall be made by the testator in the presence of each of the subscribing witnesses, or shall be acknowledged by him to have been so made to each of the subscribing witnesses.<sup>93</sup> Where this view prevails, if the testator's signature is covered or otherwise concealed so the witnesses cannot see it, the attestation is invalid.<sup>94</sup> The decisions proceed on the

82. Passing of will among witnesses

Where one attesting witness in the presence and hearing of testator gives will to the other witness to sign, there is a sufficient "acknowledgment" by testator of execution of instrument to constitute a valid attestation without testator himself requesting the second witness to sign.

theory that it is the subscription and not the instrument which must be acknowledged, and that a signature which is neither seen nor identified can in no proper sense be said to have been acknowledged by the mere statement that it had been affixed to a paper which was characterized as a will<sup>95</sup>

It has been held that there is a sufficient compliance with the rule if the witnesses either saw the signature or had the opportunity of doing so,<sup>96</sup> and the instrument should not be refused probate because, through ignorance, carelessness, or indifference, the witnesses did not look closely to see the signature<sup>97</sup> However, it may be required that the signature be called to the attention of the attesting witnesses when the acknowledgment of the subscription is made<sup>98</sup>

(5) Time of Acknowledgment

The acknowledgment by the testator must be subsequent to the signing of the instrument by him, and must precede the signing by the witnesses.

The acknowledgment by the testator must be subsequent to the signing of the instrument by him,<sup>99</sup> or practically simultaneous with such signing,<sup>1</sup> but it will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary that he had signed it, signature being necessary to make it a will, and his request that witness sign being equivalent to acknowledging that the testator had signed it<sup>2</sup>

In relation to signing by witnesses. In jurisdictions where the signing of the will by the testator before signing thereof by the witnesses is indispensable to its validity, as discussed supra § 176, acknowledgment by the testator of his signature when not made in the presence of the witnesses must precede in point of time the signing by the witnesses,<sup>3</sup> and the will is invalid if one of the witnesses affixes his signature before the testator has acknowledged his signature<sup>4</sup>

d. Number of Witnesses to Signature or Acknowledgment

The signature or acknowledgment must be made in the presence of the required number of witnesses, but generally need not be made in the presence of all of them at the same time

The signature or acknowledgment must be made in the presence of as many witnesses as are required by statute,<sup>5</sup> and this requirement cannot be overlooked or waived<sup>6</sup> However, it has generally,<sup>7</sup> although not universally,<sup>8</sup> been held that it need not be made in the presence of all of them at the same time Hence, it is sufficient if the signature is made in the presence of part of the witnesses and acknowledged in the presence of the others<sup>9</sup>

quirement,<sup>10</sup> it is very generally held, under statutes to that effect, that wills are required to be attested and subscribed by the witnesses in the presence of the testator.<sup>11</sup> These statutes are mandatory in character<sup>12</sup> and must be strictly adhered to,<sup>13</sup> and, unless substantially complied with, the will is void<sup>14</sup>. This rule, of course, requires the will to be subscribed in the presence of the testator by as many witnesses as are required by statute, and, if fewer of the witnesses subscribe in his presence, the will is void<sup>15</sup>.

Purpose of statutes The purpose of these statutes is to prevent imposition and fraud,<sup>16</sup> to insure identity,<sup>17</sup> to enable the testator to know that the witnesses have actually signed the instrument he intends as his will,<sup>18</sup> and to prevent the substitution of some other writing in place thereof<sup>19</sup>.

b. Requisites and Sufficiency in General

While some decisions have held it to be indispensable that the signing by the witnesses occur where the testator could see it if he chose to do so, others have held it to be sufficient that they sign within the hearing, knowledge, and understanding of the testator.

Many decisions have held that, in order to satisfy the requirements of statutes requiring witnesses to subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, it is indispensable that the signing occur where the testator as then circumstanced could see witnesses signing their names to the instrument if he chose to do so,<sup>20</sup> unless he was blind<sup>21</sup>. Accordingly, the witness should be actually within the reach of the testator's organs of sight, and the requirements of the statute are not satisfied if he cannot see the act of signing, but merely concludes from the surrounding circumstances and from what he understands is going on that an attestation is taking place.<sup>22</sup> However, if the testator is able to see the witnesses sign the will if he chooses, the requirements of the statute are satisfied whether or not he avails himself of the opportunity to do so.<sup>23</sup> In other words, the power to see and actual sight are equivalent and convertible terms.<sup>24</sup>

cient<sup>25</sup> Thus, in determining whether the statutory requirement of subscription by the witnesses in the presence of the testator has been satisfied, due regard must be had to the circumstances of each particular case,<sup>26</sup> since the statute does not require absolutely that the witnessing must be done in the actual sight of the testator or even within his range of vision,<sup>27</sup> and if they sign within his hearing, knowledge, and understanding, and so near as not to be substantially away from him, they are considered to be in his presence<sup>28</sup>

In some instances, under the "conscious presence rule," discussed below, the testator need not actually view the act of signing by the witnesses, provided they sign within his hearing, he knows what is being done, and the signing by the testator and the witnesses constitute one continuous transaction<sup>29</sup> In others, the subscribing witnesses are regarded as subscribing in the testator's presence, if their position and that of the testator, and their proximity to him, are such that, but for some physical infirmity which did not otherwise affect him, he could see or hear what they were doing, and if he knew and was conscious of and understood what took place<sup>30</sup>

"Conscious presence." In general the words "presence of testator" in the statutes requiring wills to be subscribed by witnesses in the presence of the testator mean a "conscious" presence<sup>31</sup> Thus, it is essential that the testator be mentally capable of recognizing and actually conscious of the act performed before him,<sup>32</sup> and it is not sufficient that the testator and witnesses be merely present together at the same time and place<sup>33</sup> In accordance with these principles, the subscription is not made in the testator's presence, if at the time of subscribing, from sleep or other cause, he is unconscious of the act of subscribing,<sup>34</sup> and is no longer possessed of the essential element of intelligent consciousness without which there can be no valid will<sup>35</sup> Conversely, it has been held that the witnesses are in his presence whenever they are so near he is conscious where they are and what they are doing through any of his senses<sup>36</sup>

c. Presence in Room or House

Particular circumstances to be considered

In determining whether testator was aware that signatures of witnesses to will were being written in another room, court could consider fact that testator had asked physician to prepare will and that both physician and his wife, witnesses, were present when testator signed, and where testator was on bed in treatment room with door open into waiting room and physician witnessed will in consultation room on the opposite side of waiting room with door open and in presence of testator's relatives, contestants of will, were circumstances which could properly be considered in determining whether physician who could not be seen by testator when signing will signed in presence of testator

Statutory requirements held satisfied

Where testator lying on bed in treatment room of physician's clinic requested physician to prepare will and physician went through adjoining waiting room in which testator's relatives were waiting, and into consultation room leaving doors open and typed will and took it to testator and explained contents, and testator signed in presence of physician and began signing before physician's wife left room, and later physician and wife in consultation room with doors open so that testator could see physician's wife but not the physician, signed as witnesses, within range of view of testator's relatives in adjoining waiting room, physician and wife substantially complied with requirements of statute requiring witnesses to subscribe in "presence of testator"

of the testator is precisely the same whether the subscription is in the same room or a different room, the law will apply the same test of presence to both cases<sup>38</sup> There is, however, a distinction between a subscription in the same room with the testator and a subscription in another room, in that the first is prima facie a subscription in the presence of the testator,<sup>39</sup> whereas, if the subscription is in another room, the presumption is that the witnesses did not subscribe in the presence of the testator<sup>40</sup> However, in neither case is the presumption conclusive,<sup>41</sup> and it is subject to rebuttal<sup>42</sup> and must yield to proof<sup>43</sup>

It is well settled that the signing of a will by witnesses in another room is sufficient if the testator sees or could see the witnesses sign if he chooses to do so<sup>44</sup> Thus, the moment the range of vision becomes unobstructed, the distinction between the same room and different rooms ceases, the partition wall is broken down, and the two rooms are turned into one<sup>45</sup> On the other hand, if the signing in another room is outside of the testator's range of vision, it is not signed in the presence of the testator and is insufficient<sup>46</sup>

Conversely, a signing may be out of the presence of the testator even though it actually takes place in the same room<sup>47</sup> Thus, although the will is signed in the same room, it is not signed in the testator's presence if the signing is done in a clandestine and fraudulent manner.<sup>48</sup>

Testator in conveyance near house in which will is signed. It has been held that the statutory requirement that the witnesses sign the will in the presence of the testator is not complied with where the testator was in a parked automobile and the witnesses were inside a building through which the testator might have seen the witnesses, but could not have seen the will<sup>49</sup> Certainly, if a change of position on his part was necessary to enable him to see the witnesses sign, the will was not signed in his presence<sup>50</sup>

d. Effort or Change of Position Necessary

Decisions differ as to whether it is essential that the testator be able to see the signing by the witnesses without effort or change of position, and the effect of physical inability to make such a change of position.

In some decisions it is either held or said without qualification that, in order to satisfy the statutory requirement that a will be signed by the witnesses in the presence of the testator, it is indispensable that he shall be able, without effort and without change of position, to see the act of signing<sup>51</sup> and that it is of no consequence that he was physically able to change his position so as to see the act of signing<sup>52</sup> In other decisions a will is subscribed in a testator's presence where, by moderate effort on his part, or without any material change of position, he could have seen the act of signing, and had the physical capacity to make the effort or change of position,<sup>53</sup> where he had the physical ability to change his position and by doing so could have seen the proceeding,<sup>54</sup> or where some change in the testator's posture is requisite to bring the action of the witnesses within the scope of his vision, and such movement is not prevented by his physical infirmity, but is caused by an indisposition or indifference on his part to take visual notice of the proceeding<sup>55</sup>

Physical incapacity to change position. The weight of authority is to the effect that whether the signing is in the same room or in another room, if it is impossible for the testator to see the witnesses sign the will without changing his position, and he is physically incapable of doing so without assistance, and on this account he does not see the witnesses subscribe, the will is not witnessed in his presence,<sup>56</sup> and the fact that the testator might have caused himself to be moved into a position where he might have seen the witnesses subscribe does not affect the operation of this rule.<sup>57</sup> Moreover, the rule has been extended to cases where the testator, although physically capable of changing his position so as to see the witnesses sign the will, could not do so without endangering his life and disobeying the instructions of his physician.<sup>58</sup>

On the other hand, notwithstanding the testator's physical incapacity to change his position so that he may see the witnesses sign the will, it may be considered as signed in his presence where it is signed within his line of vision, if he had been able to look a few feet from him and where he could hear all that was said and knew and understood all that was done.<sup>59</sup> Similarly a will has been regarded as attested in the presence of the testator if he understood and was conscious of what the witnesses were doing when they signed the will and could, if it had not been for his physical infirmities, readily have changed his position so that he could have seen and heard what they were doing when they wrote their names, if he had been so disposed.<sup>60</sup>

Change of position necessary to avoid seeing subscription. Obviously, a will is subscribed in the presence of the testator where he is so situated that he is obliged to see the witnesses sign unless he closes his eyes or changes his position by turning his head away.<sup>61</sup>

e. Subsequent Acknowledgment of Signature in Presence of Testator

Authorities differ as to whether the statutory requirement that the testator witness the attestation is satisfied where the witnesses, subsequent to their signing outside the presence of the testator, acknowledge their signatures in his presence.

Generally, statutes requiring wills to be subscribed

by the witnesses in the presence of the testator are not satisfied by their signing the will outside of his presence and subsequently acknowledging their signatures in his presence,<sup>62</sup> even though this is done with the testator's assent and approval.<sup>63</sup> In contradiction of the foregoing views, a recognition to the testator by the witnesses of their signatures immediately after subscription has been considered a substantial and satisfactory compliance with the requirements of the statute,<sup>64</sup> and in some jurisdictions where the act of signing by the witnesses was within the hearing, knowledge, and understanding of the testator, although not within his sight, and in addition thereto there was an acknowledgment of their signatures by the witnesses, assented to, and approved by, the testator, the subscription was regarded as in the presence of the testator.<sup>65</sup>

f. What Testator Must See or Be Able to See

Authorities differ as to just how much the testator must be able to see of the actual signing of the will by the witnesses.

In numerous decisions it is held or stated without qualification that the testator must see or be able to see the witnesses in the act of subscribing the will,<sup>66</sup> in order that he may satisfy himself by ocular demonstration that they are witnessing the very paper he designed to be his last will.<sup>67</sup> Thus, the statutory requirement is not complied with where the testator was in such a position relative to the witnesses that he could have seen the witnesses but could not have seen the will,<sup>68</sup> and a will was not signed in the presence of the testator where the testator could have seen only the backs of the witnesses as they sat writing but could not have seen their faces, arms, or hands, or the paper on which they wrote.<sup>69</sup>

On the other hand, it has been held that where the testator can see enough of the act of signing to know that the witnesses and the will are in his presence and that the former are signing their names as witnesses, the statutory requirement is sufficiently complied with, although the bodies of the witnesses, when the signing is done, are between the testator and the table, so that he cannot see the pen or the letters traced by it, or, probably, the hand holding the pen<sup>70</sup> Moreover, a similar conclusion has been reached where it was held that if the witnesses were in the range of the testator's vision, the will will be considered as having been signed in his presence, although the testator could not see their forearms and writing hands, and the paper itself<sup>71</sup> The statutory requirement was considered sufficiently complied with where the testator could see the motion of the pen on the paper, although he could not distinguish the letters the pen was forming<sup>72</sup>

g. Blind Testator

While, in determining whether the statutory requirement has been satisfied, some decisions use the same test with respect to blind testators as with those who can see, other decisions require that a blind testator must be made aware, by senses other than sight, of the subscription by the witnesses

Some decisions hold that the statutes providing that wills shall be subscribed by the witnesses in the presence of the testator require neither more nor less in the case of a blind testator than of one who can see<sup>73</sup> Thus, a will is signed in the presence of a testator who is blind where he could have seen the same had he not been blind,<sup>74</sup> even though the will was signed in a room connected by an open archway with the room occupied by the testator<sup>75</sup> In one decision a signing of the will in the same

Other decisions formulate a stricter rule, and it is either held or said that if the testator is blind the superintending control, which in other cases is exercised by sight, must be transferred to the other senses by means of which he must be made aware that the witnesses subscribed the will in his presence<sup>77</sup> However, if this requirement is satisfied the will will be considered as having been subscribed in his presence<sup>78</sup>

§ 190 — Signing by Witnesses in Presence of Each Other

While it is not generally required that the attesting witnesses should subscribe their names in the presence of each other, some jurisdictions expressly so require by statute

In most jurisdictions, since no requirement to that effect is contained in the applicable statutes, it is not necessary that the attesting witnesses should subscribe their names in the presence of each other<sup>79</sup> However, in those jurisdictions in which the statutes expressly require that the will shall be subscribed by the attesting witnesses in the presence of each other, if this requirement is not complied with, the will is void<sup>80</sup>

Even where the requirement exists, it is not necessary that all the attesting witnesses should actually see each other sign the will, but it will be sufficient that they have the opportunity to do so and could have seen each other sign if they had looked in the direction where the act of signing was being performed<sup>81</sup> However, this much is necessary, and if one of the witnesses was in another room where his vision was necessarily impeded by a curtain, the statutory requirement is not satisfied<sup>82</sup>

Acknowledgment of signatures in presence of each other While it has been held that where the attesting witnesses are required to sign the will in the presence of each other, the requirement is not satisfied by their acknowledgment in the presence of each other of their signatures previously and separately made,<sup>83</sup> there is also some authority to the contrary<sup>84</sup>

§ 191. — Requisites and Sufficiency of Subscription by Witnesses in General

b Signature of person taking acknowledgment of will

a. In General

Generally, in order for one to become an attesting witness he must be aware of the character of the act and must subscribe his name with the intention of signing as a witness.

In order for a person to become an attesting witness he must be aware of the character of the act which he is called on to perform, and must subscribe his name with the intention of signing as a witness<sup>85</sup> Thus, the facts and circumstances attending his signing must show that he is signing as a subscribing witness and not for some other purpose.<sup>86</sup> However, if the surrounding facts and circumstances indicate that he is signing as a witness, his secret intention not to act as a witness,<sup>87</sup> or his private belief that he is acting in some other capacity,<sup>88</sup> does not make the will invalid.

On the other hand, according to some cases there is nothing in the statutes which requires proof of a specific intent to act solely as a witness,<sup>89</sup> and no such intent is necessary where the person who is relied on as a witness observed all of the events to which he is required to attest, and signed the instrument<sup>90</sup> Accordingly, it does not necessarily follow that one did not sign as a witness merely because he also intended his signature to serve another purpose<sup>91</sup>

Hand of witness guided by another On the theory that there is actual physical participation by him in the act of signing, a will has been considered properly subscribed where the hand of the witness was guided by another in making the signature<sup>92</sup> In one decision such subscription was sufficient, even though the witness was at the time able to write his name<sup>93</sup>

Signing of testator's name followed by signature of person so signing Where one subscribes the testator's name and adds his own name to indicate that it was he who wrote the testator's name, he will not be regarded as a witness to the will unless the facts and circumstances show that he signed as a subscribing witness and not only as an amanuensis<sup>94</sup> Thus, while one who signs the

testator's name at his request and also subscribes his own immediately after it with the word "By" as a prefix thereto may be considered a subscribing witness,<sup>95</sup> there is also authority to the contrary,<sup>96</sup> and it has further been held that on this state of facts the person so subscribing is not an attesting witness, even though the word "witness" follows the subscription of his name<sup>97</sup>

In one jurisdiction where the statute requires a witness to a will to "sign his name as a witness," where a witness inadvertently signed his own initials and the surname of the testator, the will was insufficiently executed, the view being taken that under this provision attesting witnesses shall sign and sign only in one way, by affixing their names<sup>98</sup> In another jurisdiction under a statute identical in its provisions a directly opposite conclusion has been reached, and it was held that a will, to the attestation clause of which one of the witnesses signed the testator's name, instead of his own name, the act having been done animo attestandi, and without any fraud or intent wrongfully to personate another person, should be admitted to probate<sup>99</sup> So, also, in another jurisdiction where the statute requires wills to be "subscribed" by witnesses, it has been held that, where one witness in subscribing the will wrote his Christian name but completed the writing by inadvertently setting down the initial and surname of another witness whose signature preceded his, there was a sufficient subscription<sup>1</sup>

Failure to write place of residence. Although a statute requires that the witnesses to a will write opposite their names their place of residence, on penalty of a designated amount recoverable by suit of any person interested in the property disposed of by the will, the failure of the witnesses to write their addresses after their names does not affect the validity of its execution or incapacitate the witnesses to testify thereto<sup>2</sup> With respect to penal liability under this statute, it has been held that the word "residence" does not require the addition of a street number and that the statute is sufficiently complied with where a witness stamped opposite his name with a small seal the words "Notary Public, New York County."<sup>3</sup>

In general, a will is properly attested by one empowered to take acknowledgments of written instruments, even though his signature is preceded by a certificate of acknowledgment.

Generally, where one vested with the power to take acknowledgments of written instruments is asked by a testator to attest his will,<sup>4</sup> or to take the testator's acknowledgment thereof,<sup>5</sup> the will is properly attested by him as a witness, even though the signature is preceded by a certificate of acknowledg-

Where notary public saw testator make his mark on will in presence of one who signed as a witness in presence of testator and notary, and the notary certified that mark had been made by testator who was unable to write his name because of nervousness and signed certification as notary public in presence of testator and such witness, the will so executed was entitled to probate as one duly executed in the presence of two competent subscribing witnesses

ment Such attestation may be sufficient where the acknowledgment was not at the request but with the consent of the testator <sup>6</sup>

These decisions proceed on the theory that the certification of the facts that the testator acknowledged the instrument to be his will and that the signature was his are appropriate to the attestation of the instrument,<sup>7</sup> that the taking of the acknowledgment by the officer and attaching his signature to the certificate are necessarily done for the purpose of evidencing the fact that he had witnessed the execution of the will,<sup>8</sup> and that the certificate being superfluous and useless must be considered as surplusage which cannot have the effect of impairing the signature or vitiating the attestation <sup>9</sup>

Officer not signing as witness The fact that the officer who was requested to take the acknowledgment believed that he was not asked to sign as a witness and that he did not undertake to do so does not ordinarily impair the validity of his signature as a witness <sup>10</sup> However, it has been held that where the character in which a person signs is merely that of a notary public purporting to take an oath, his signing is not in compliance with the statute <sup>11</sup>

§ 192. — Signing by Mark, Initials, Fictitious Name, or Description

A witness may effectually subscribe his name to a will by mark as well as by writing his name therein

While a subscribing witness, like the testator himself, signs most appropriately by subscribing his name in his own handwriting, and there is much reason why a witness intelligent and able-bodied enough to do this should be chosen to perform the office,<sup>12</sup> it is nevertheless well settled, except as it may be otherwise provided by statute,<sup>13</sup> that, just as a will may be validly executed by the testator by mark, as discussed supra § 172, a witness may effectually subscribe his name by mark as well as by writing his name therein <sup>14</sup> The reason of the rule allowing the testator to sign by mark applies equally to the subscribing witness,<sup>15</sup> and it has been held that the failure of the person writing the witness' name to sign his own name as witness of the fact that he so wrote the name does not invalidate a signing by mark, although the statute provides that a "signature" is to be held to "include mark, when the person cannot write, his name being written near it, and witnessed by the person who writes his name as a witness" <sup>16</sup>

§ 193. — Signing of Witness' Name by Third Person at his Request

Decisions differ as to whether the signing of the name of the witness in his presence and at his request by another constitutes a sufficient subscription of the will, without the making of any mark or any other physical act on his part

According to some decisions, the signing of the name of the witness in his presence and at his request by another constitutes a sufficient subscription of the will without his performance of any physical act, such as making his mark or touching the pen, or having his hand guided by the person subscribing at his request,<sup>19</sup> and such signing may be done by another attesting witness <sup>20</sup> In at least one decision the rule was applied, although the witness whose name was signed by another was able to write.<sup>21</sup> In another instance, failure of the person so signing it to affix his own signature as an attesting witness did not invalidate the will.<sup>22</sup>

On the other hand, in other decisions, in direct opposition to the foregoing views, it is considered that notwithstanding the will is signed by a witness at his request and in his presence, it is not a valid subscription unless the witness also makes his mark to the signature as written or otherwise physically partakes in the act of signing.<sup>23</sup> In one decision, where on the facts established it was not necessary to go as far as the decisions just considered, it was held that one of the subscribing witnesses to the will cannot sign the name of another who himself was "well able to write," and who does not participate in the act of signing.<sup>24</sup>

One physically incompetent to become a subscribing witness cannot effectually perform the act of subscription through a person who was legally incompetent by reason of interest to attest the will as a witness in his own name and right.<sup>25</sup>

In jurisdictions where it is essential that the witness see or have the opportunity of seeing the testator's signature, as discussed supra § 188 c (4), the signing by another of the name of a witness having eyesight too poor to write his own name or see any signature on the paper is ineffectual.<sup>26</sup>

§ 194. — Time of Affixing Signatures

It is not generally necessary that the witnesses sign their names at the same time, and it is sufficient that they sign as part of the same transaction.

With reference to each other it is not necessary, unless the statute so requires, that the witnesses sign their names at the same time,<sup>27</sup> and it is sufficient that the required number of witnesses signed as part of the "same transaction,"<sup>28</sup> what constitutes the "same occasion and the same transaction" being a matter of judicial determination in each case, dependent on the facts thereof, and incapable of being governed by any general rule.<sup>29</sup>

Whether or not it is essential that the signing of the will by the testator shall precede the signing of the witnesses is discussed supra § 176.

§ 195. — Place of Signatures

- a In general
- b Requirement of signatures at end of will

a. In General

In general, unless it is otherwise provided by statute, the particular place on the instrument at which the attesting witnesses affix their signatures is immaterial.

While the proper place for the signatures of the attesting witnesses is somewhere underneath the signature of the testator,<sup>30</sup> in general, unless it is otherwise provided by statute, the particular place on the instrument at which they affix their signatures is immaterial, provided they sign with the intent of witnessing the whole will.<sup>31</sup> Accordingly, a will

Fact that the signatures of the testator and the subscribing witnesses are not contiguous does not

is properly attested, although the witnesses signed above instead of below the words designating attestation,<sup>32</sup> or although they sign in and not after the attestation clause,<sup>33</sup> or although one signs above and the other below the attestation clause,<sup>34</sup> or although the witnesses signed towards the beginning of the instrument<sup>35</sup> However, except in so far as an exception may be recognized in the case of holographic wills, as discussed infra § 205, it is essential to the validity of a will that, where a statute expressly fixes the location of the signatures of the attesting witnesses, the statutory provision must be complied with<sup>36</sup>

Signing each sheet or page of will While it has been said to be the better practice to have each separate sheet of the will attested and subscribed by the attesting witnesses,<sup>37</sup> and in some jurisdictions such a requirement is contained in the applicable statutes,<sup>38</sup> in the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect, it is not necessary<sup>39</sup>

Signing on separate sheet The attestation of the witnesses, if not on the same sheet of paper as the signature of the testator, must be on a paper physically connected with that sheet<sup>40</sup> However, if it is so connected the attestation will be sufficient,<sup>41</sup> and no particular mode of fastening the papers together is required<sup>42</sup> Thus, it may be sufficient that they are pasted together,<sup>43</sup> or folded together,<sup>44</sup> or fastened together by eyelets at the top,<sup>45</sup> or by a clipless fastener<sup>46</sup> However, the attestation may also be considered sufficient even though it is on a separate sheet of paper not physically connected with the rest of the will, where it is connected by express reference and by internal sense, by coherence, and by adaptation of parts<sup>47</sup>

b. Requirement of Signatures at End of Will

In some jurisdictions, the attesting witnesses are required to sign at the end of the will, the "end" meaning the physical end of the will, or the place on the instrument at which the dispositive provisions terminate

"subscribed" by the attesting witnesses require them to sign at the end of the will<sup>50</sup>

What constitutes signing at end of will To satisfy the statutory requirement of signing at the end of the will, the witnesses must sign at the physical end of the will,<sup>51</sup> and that end is reached when the will is read in natural and consecutive method of reading, without turning backward or skipping a part in order to have the sense of the will connected and continuous<sup>52</sup> The signatures of the witnesses are held to be at the "end" of the will, when they immediately follow the attestation clause,<sup>53</sup> or even where they immediately precede it,<sup>54</sup> or, although they are on one side of a sheet of paper, and the testamentary provisions and the testator's signature are on the other, concluding near the bottom of the page<sup>55</sup>

Stated otherwise, the "end" of the will means that place on the instrument at which the dispositive provisions terminate<sup>56</sup> Accordingly, a will is not signed at the end by attesting witnesses where their signatures precede provisions of a testamentary or dispositive character,<sup>57</sup> and it is of no consequence that the dispositive provision was shown to have

Strict application of rule

The law that where signature of a testator or of necessary witness is written above matter which is dispositive, operative, material, or important, the subscription is not at end of instrument, and instrument is therefore invalid as a will, will be strictly applied, and applies to holographic instruments.

N.Y.—In re Begun's Will, 123 NYS 2d 782

Matter on reverse side of sheet

(1) Where face of instrument purporting to be a will was duly executed by testator and attested by two witnesses, but matter written on the back of instrument by testator was undated and his signature at the end thereof was not attested by any witnesses, such writing on the back of instrument was not admissible to probate as a will

N.Y.—In re Frickey's Will, 96 NYS 2d 825, 198 Misc 716, reversed on other grounds In re Frickey's Estate, 114 NYS 2d 270, 280 App Div 880

(2) However, in declaring instrument offered as will to be validly executed where matter appears on reverse side after signatures of testator and witnesses, court has duty to exercise due care in view of importance of reasons for statute requiring will to be witnessed at end and desire of courts to carry out intent of statute, and, under statute requiring that will be witnessed at the end, instrument consisting of one sheet on which testatrix and witnesses appended signatures and on reverse side of which testatrix disposed of furniture, cut off beneficiaries who might attempt to cause trouble or litigation and empowered executors to rent property and gave them power of sale, was held required to be denied probate, since matter appearing after signature on reverse side of sheet was important matter of dispositive nature

N.Y.—In re Roughgarden's Will, 295 NYS 355, 162 Misc 455.

(3) Will, written on a printed form, first page of which contained blank space, followed by testator's signature and attestation clause, was not signed at the end, as required by statute, where such blank space, intended for bequests, would not contain all the bequests and part of them were put on the back of the form, with notation on margin, "Continued on back"

been added before the execution of the will<sup>58</sup> Thus, a will is not signed at the end by attesting witnesses where their signatures are followed by a postscript with certain additional instructions to the executor,<sup>59</sup> nor is a will signed at the end by attesting witnesses where their signatures precede a clause appointing executors,<sup>60</sup> or giving the executors power to sell designated land and devote the proceeds to the liquidation of any deficiency in the interest of cash bequests under the will<sup>61</sup> However, a will is properly executed where the signatures of the subscribing witnesses are followed by written or printed matter, but such matter is not in the nature of a testamentary or dispositive character<sup>62</sup>

Blank space between conclusion of will and signatures The decisions all agree that a will may be considered as signed by the witnesses at the end, although there is a blank space between the conclusion of the will and the signatures<sup>63</sup> In some decisions it is either held<sup>64</sup> or said<sup>65</sup> that the amount of space intervening between the conclusion of the will and the signatures is of no importance Other decisions, however, are opposed to this view, and, although they recognize that no general rule can be laid down as to what constitutes an unnecessary and unreasonable blank space between the conclusion of the will and the subscription of the witnesses,<sup>66</sup> hold that a blank space may be so unnecessarily and unreasonably large as to invalidate the will<sup>67</sup>

§ 196. — Attestation Clause

An attestation clause, which is a certificate certifying as to the facts and circumstances attending the execution of a will, is useful and customary, but is not ordinarily essential to the validity of a will otherwise properly executed.

The "attestation clause" of a will, which term has been variously defined as a certificate certifying as to the facts and circumstances attending the execution of a will,<sup>68</sup> or the formal, nonmaterial, and nondispositive provision which, although forming part of a will, is not necessary to the validity thereof,<sup>69</sup> has as its purpose to preserve in permanent form a memorandum of the facts attending the execution of the will so that, in case of the death of the attesting witnesses, or a failure of memory or deliberate misrepresentation on their part, the facts may still be proved<sup>70</sup>

62 Disposal of remains

A will directing disposal of testator's remains is admissible to probate even though such direction follows subscription, as it neither affects disposition of testator's estate, nor appoints executor or guardian, and hence is not testamentary in character

Agreement between testator and wife with respect to mutual wills

Where will consisting of three pages, the first of which contained dispositions, the second a testimonium and attestation clause terminating midway on page, and the third an agreement between testator and wife with respect to mutual wills and containing no dispositive provisions, was signed by witnesses after at-testation clause, will was subscribed by witnesses at end thereof in accordance with statutory requirement, and fact that subscriptions of testator and witnesses were not contiguous did not affect validity of will

with all the formalities of execution and is signed by the witnesses, as discussed infra § 411. Moreover, it is customary,<sup>72</sup> and is considered the better practice.<sup>73</sup> However, except in so far as it may be required under statutory provisions,<sup>74</sup> its existence is not necessary to the valid execution of the will,<sup>75</sup> provided there is evidence to establish that there was a proper attestation by witnesses in other respects.<sup>76</sup> The only evidence which the will itself need bear of a proper and sufficient attestation is the signature of the witnesses.<sup>77</sup>

As no attestation clause is necessary, such a clause in a will may be disregarded as surplusage.<sup>78</sup> Accordingly, the form of such a clause is immaterial,<sup>79</sup> and it is no valid objection to a will that an attestation clause unnecessarily added to the will is defective, erroneous, or incomplete in its recitals of the facts necessary to the execution of the will,<sup>80</sup> or is not supported by the evidence,<sup>81</sup> and no harm is done by the incorporation of some of the words of the attestation clause in the will proper.<sup>82</sup> Furthermore, the failure of the subscribing witnesses to read the attestation clause will not defeat the proper execution of the instrument as a will.<sup>83</sup>

was of no consequence that the attestation clause was defective or even absent,<sup>84</sup> it is now the rule, under statutes which require an attestation clause and provide that "the attestation shall state the number of sheets of pages used, upon which the will is written, and the fact that the testator signed the will and every page thereof, or caused some other person to write his name, under his express direction, in the presence of three witnesses, and the latter witnessed and signed the will and all pages thereof in the presence of the testator and of each other," and provide that the will shall be disallowed if not so executed and attested, that the will is distinct and different from the attestation,<sup>85</sup> and the statutory requirements are mandatory.<sup>86</sup> Accordingly, an attestation clause is necessary and essential to the validity of the will,<sup>87</sup> and in the absence thereof the will cannot be admitted to probate.<sup>88</sup>

The attestation clause must be made in strict conformity with the requirements of the statute, and where it fails to show on its face a full compliance with those requirements, the defect constitutes sufficient ground for the disallowance of the will,<sup>89</sup> and the facts which must be recited therein cannot be proved by any evidence other than the attestation clause itself.<sup>90</sup> Accordingly, it must state that the testator and the witnesses saw each other sign the will,<sup>91</sup> and it must also state the number of pages in the will,<sup>92</sup> and recite that the witnesses signed the will on each and every page thereof on the left margin in the presence of the testator, otherwise it is fatally defective and annuls the will.<sup>93</sup> However, in stating the necessary facts it is not necessary to use the exact language of the statute, and it will be sufficient if the facts appear in any manner intelligible from the attestation clause.<sup>94</sup>

§ 197 — Attestation of Erasures, Interlineations, and Substitutions

In general, alterations of a will by erasures, inter-lineations, or substitutions are valid only when attested with the same formalities as the will itself.

While there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>98</sup> it has almost uniformly been held that alterations of a will by erasures, interlineations, or substitutions are valid and operative only when attested with the same formalities as the will itself.<sup>99</sup> It is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the rule that the whole will in its altered state is properly attested,<sup>1</sup> or that the alterations alone be attested,<sup>2</sup> if properly brought to the attention of the attesting witnesses.<sup>3</sup>

Where interlineations are wholly immaterial and produce no alteration in the will,<sup>4</sup> or in no degree affect the dispositions thereof,<sup>5</sup> it has been held not to invalidate the will that they were made after one and before the other of the witnesses signed.

§ 198. Codicils

A codicil must be executed with the same formalities required in the execution of a will

A codicil, in order to be effective, must be executed with the same formalities as are requisite in the execution of a valid will,<sup>6</sup> but there is a sufficient execution where these requirements are complied with.<sup>7</sup>

(1) Section of act of 1941 adopted to make uniform the execution of wills, which section deals with holographic wills, had effect of repealing

requirements,<sup>20</sup> strictly,<sup>21</sup> or at least substantially<sup>22</sup> If a holographic will does not comply with the statutory requirements therefor, it is void, no matter how clearly it conveys the wishes of the decedent<sup>23</sup> Statutes providing for holographic wills are procedural and remedial,<sup>24</sup> and are mandatory and not merely directory<sup>25</sup> It has been held that they must be strictly,<sup>26</sup> although reasonably,<sup>27</sup> construed to protect the rights of heirs at law,<sup>28</sup> but at the same time to give effect to their purpose<sup>29</sup>

In absence of statutory recognition Where the legislature in a particular jurisdiction has defined and prescribed the manner in which wills shall be executed, without making a distinct provision for holographic wills, such wills are invalid unless drawn and executed in conformity with the requirements as to other wills<sup>30</sup> although it has been said that the atmosphere surrounding a testamentary instrument wholly in the handwriting of the testator is such as to cause it to be accepted as his will with less strictness as to proof of a compliance with statutory formalities<sup>31</sup> In such jurisdictions no exception is recognized in favor of holographic wills with respect to attestation, acknowledgment, or publication,<sup>32</sup> and, if such requirements are not complied with, the instrument fails as a will<sup>33</sup> In some of these jurisdictions, however, the courts do not require the same strict compliance with these statutory requirements as is exacted in the case of other wills<sup>34</sup> Nevertheless, there must be a substantial compliance with the statute,<sup>35</sup> with the statutory requirements as to attestation,<sup>36</sup> signing in

Where decedent and one witness signed holographic document following dispositive directions at bottom of sheet of paper, and second attesting witness signed on left-hand margin of sheet above decedent's signature, execution of document did not comply with statute requiring two attesting witnesses to sign their names as witnesses at the "end of the will"

the presence of witnesses,<sup>37</sup> acknowledgment of signature to witnesses,<sup>38</sup> or publication of the will to them,<sup>39</sup> or the instrument will fail. As to whether the testator had signed the will before the attestation clause was written and before it had been presented to the witnesses to sign, it has been held that the fact that the instrument is holographic raises a presumption, to a greater extent than if the will had been prepared by another, that it was signed before those acts were performed.<sup>40</sup>

The law of the domicile of the testator determines the validity of a holographic will as to personalty and the law of the situs governs as to realty.

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise the validity of a holographic will as to personal property is to be determined by the law of the testator's domicile,<sup>41</sup> and as to real property by the law of the jurisdiction wherein it is situated.<sup>42</sup> A statute providing that holographic wills may be made in or out of the state has been construed to mean that such wills are valid within such state wherever made,<sup>43</sup> and, under a statute providing that every testamentary instrument made out of the state shall be valid if made according to the forms provided by the law of the place where it was made or by the law of the place where the testator resided when it was made, a holographic will, not witnessed as required by the laws of the state wherein the real property is situated and of which the testator was a citizen, but valid under the laws of the foreign country where it was made and where the testator

Law at time of execution or at death The diversity of opinion as to whether the validity of a will is dependent on the law in force at the time of the testator's death or the law in force at the date of the execution of the will, as discussed supra § 150, is also evident in the case of holographic wills, thus, while it has been held that the validity of the instrument will depend on the law at the time of the testator's death,<sup>45</sup> it has also been held that such validity is dependent on the law in force at the time of the execution of the will.<sup>46</sup>

§ 202. — Who May Make

Testamentary capacity to make a holographic will is governed by the general rules with respect to testamentary capacity.

General rules as to testamentary capacity have been held applicable to holographic wills.<sup>47</sup> On the theory that a general statute empowering all persons over a certain age and of sound mind to dispose of property by will does not include married women, it has been held that statutes which in general terms authorize holographic wills do not give the right to married women to make wills of this character.<sup>48</sup>

§ 203. — Testamentary Intent

It is essential to the validity of a holographic will that the testator intend to dispose of his estate.

Testamentary intent is necessary to the validity of a holographic will.<sup>49</sup> No particular words are nec-

the existence of testamentary intent is in doubt<sup>55</sup> Mere notes or memoranda for a will do not operate as a holographic will,<sup>56</sup> nor does an instrument which expresses an intent merely to do something in the future<sup>57</sup>

Existence of previous will. An instrument will not be given the effect of a holographic will where there exists a previously made and unrevoked will, unless it clearly appears from the language of the holographic paper that the testator intended to make further testamentary provision with respect to the

In order to be valid, a holographic will must be a complete and executed instrument, but absolute precision is not required.

An instrument offered as a holographic will must be a complete and executed document,<sup>72</sup> although absolute precision of execution is not necessary,<sup>73</sup> and all that is required is a clear showing on the face of the instrument of its execution in conformity with the law<sup>74</sup> Statutes authorizing holographic wills usually require that they be entirely in the

b. Handwriting of Testator

It is generally required that a holographic will be wholly in the handwriting of the testator.<sup>78</sup> Rewriting of a portion thereof,<sup>79</sup> or alterations made by the testator,<sup>80</sup> do not affect an otherwise valid testamentary disposition. The document may be written in pencil,<sup>81</sup> or partly in ink and partly in pencil,<sup>82</sup> or at different times with different ink,<sup>83</sup> but a document written with a typewriter does not

Jointly executed instruments

(1) Unwitnessed writing jointly executed by husband and wife in the handwriting of each of them could not be regarded as a holographic will because not written wholly by either of them.

(2) Where instrument signed by decedent and wife and reciting "After our death we want" named beneficiary "to have what we've got" was wholly in decedent's handwriting except the wife's signature, the instrument could be probated as decedent's holographic will, since wife's signature was not part of decedent's will and could be disregarded.

Tenn—Jones v Myers, 154 S W 2d 245, 178 Tenn 24

(3) Where will, which was in handwriting of husband, and which purported to be will of husband and wife leaving their estates to the survivor, and which was signed by husband and wife, provided spaces for signatures of two witnesses, but no witnesses signed, the will was ineffective as a testamentary disposition on part of wife, but was nevertheless effective as to husband.

Instrument held valid

Where will was unambiguous and made a natural disposition of testator's property and was entirely in the handwriting of testator and was in proper order except for one broken sentence just before the signature of testator, which sentence did not affect any material part of the will, and jury found against contention that broken sentence indicated that a part of former will had been pasted to will in question, will was valid.

satisfy the requirement,<sup>84</sup> even though it is signed by the testator<sup>85</sup>

The effect of the appearance of matter not in the handwriting of deceased in or on a document purporting to be a holographic will has been the subject of somewhat different rules in the various jurisdictions. In some it is held that the mere presence of printed matter on a testamentary paper does not render it invalid as a holographic will where such printing is no part of the writing and is disassociated therefrom,<sup>86</sup> nevertheless, if printed, typed, stamped words or figures,<sup>87</sup> or written matter not in the handwriting of the testator,<sup>88</sup> constitutes a part of the instrument, such matter will invalidate it as a holographic will. A similar rule is followed in other jurisdictions to the effect that an instrument partly printed is not a valid holographic will if the written provisions are not complete in themselves,<sup>89</sup> but the fact that the paper contains matter not in the testator's handwriting will not invalidate it where it appears that the printed words were not intended by the testator to form any part of his will,<sup>90</sup> and are separate and distinct therefrom.<sup>91</sup> In still other jurisdictions it is the rule that, while all of the matter not in the handwriting of deceased will be disregarded,<sup>92</sup> particularly where it is merely surplusage,<sup>93</sup> where all of the words appearing on the paper in his handwriting are sufficient to constitute a will, the fact that other words not in his handwriting appear thereon will not defeat the intention of the testator otherwise expressed.<sup>94</sup>

Stationer's will forms It appears to be held generally that an instrument written on a stationer's will form by filling in the blank spaces is not a valid holographic will,<sup>95</sup> even though the matter written by decedent in his own hand would, standing alone, constitute a complete testamentary disposition.<sup>96</sup>

c. Dating

Although it is not necessary that a holographic will be dated where the statute does not require such formality,<sup>3</sup> by virtue of statutes in most jurisdictions a paper purporting to be a holographic will is not valid unless it is dated<sup>4</sup> wholly in the handwriting of the testator<sup>5</sup> This requirement is not satisfied by a recital of testator's age,<sup>6</sup> or of a date on which a prior testamentary instrument was executed<sup>7</sup> Except in jurisdictions following the rule of liberal construction of holographic will statutes, considered supra § 200, which hold that the year and the month are sufficient to "date" the instrument,<sup>8</sup> it is generally held that the "date" required includes the year, month, and day, and that if any one of these is wanting the will is invalid,<sup>9</sup> and, where any part of the date is doubtful or uncertain, whether as to the day, month, or year, the instrument will fail as a holographic will<sup>10</sup> However, where one of the figures of the date has been surcharged or superimposed on another figure, in such manner that the exact date can be seen with certainty, the testament will not be invalidated<sup>11</sup> The sufficiency of the date of a holographic will must be determined from the face of the will alone, without any extrinsic evidence<sup>12</sup>

dates, as it is not necessary that it be written on the same day at one time<sup>13</sup>

Correctness of dates While the date borne by a holographic will is assumed to be its true date,<sup>14</sup> the will is not invalidated by the giving of an erroneous date,<sup>15</sup> unless the date is so obviously unreasonable as to amount to no date at all<sup>16</sup>

Time of dating Ordinarily the testator may complete his holographic will by dating it properly even after he has finished making it<sup>17</sup>

Where two separate clauses were written by the testator at the same time and constitute but a single instrument, a date at the beginning of the first clause will suffice for the whole instrument<sup>27</sup>

The use of well-known abbreviations of the year and month does not invalidate a will,<sup>28</sup> but where both of the figures, intended to represent the day and the month, are less than the number thirteen, such an abbreviation is insufficient because of the well recognized variance in the common abbreviation as to whether the day or the month is represented by the first figure<sup>29</sup>

d Signature

A holographic will must be signed by the testator. The position where the signature must appear on the instrument varies according to the statutory requirement

It is now generally held that a holographic instrument will not constitute a valid will unless it has been signed by the testator<sup>30</sup> Where the stat-

Time of signing

Fact that testatrix' signature may have been placed on will four days after the date stated in the will and as long after the body of the will was written would not prevent the will from being given effect as a holographic will

utes provide that a valid holographic will be signed at the end of the writing, or be "subscribed,"<sup>31</sup> the requirement must be fulfilled.<sup>32</sup> However, where the writing begins at the top and finishes on the last line of a sheet of legal cap, a signature on the margin line at the bottom of the page has been held to be a sufficient subscription under the statute.<sup>33</sup> In some jurisdictions where the statutes do not use the term "subscribing" it is held that the signature must nevertheless be at the end of the will,<sup>34</sup> but in other jurisdictions where the statutes contain the same or similar wording the requirement as to signing is satisfied when the signature of the testator appears in any part of the will,<sup>35</sup> providing it

evidences the execution and completeness of the instrument.<sup>36</sup> Thus, notwithstanding the usual place of signing and thereby evidencing the execution and completeness of a holographic will is at the end of the document,<sup>37</sup> the signature of the testator if found elsewhere may be a signature or token of execution,<sup>38</sup> if the circumstances warrant the positive and satisfactory inference.<sup>40</sup> The only evidence which will justify this conclusion must be found in and on the instrument itself,<sup>41</sup> and, in the absence of anything on the face of the paper to raise the inference that a name appearing elsewhere than at the end of the writing was intended as a signature in execution, the holographic document may not be

Signing held sufficient

(1) Where signature of deceased in holographic testament appeared at end of all dispositive items only in phrase "I Clara M Smith, have subscribed my name this the 28 of August 1940" and was followed by attestation clause and instrument was intended to be decedent's testament and decedent acknowledged it as her testament before two competent witnesses who subscribed it, instrument was sufficiently "signed at the end" in accordance with statutory provision so as to entitle it to probate

Ohio—In re Smith's Will, 13 Ohio Supp 66

(2) Instrument written by testator, who possessed testamentary capacity, in ink on sheet of plain paper leaving house to housekeeper, was a valid holographic will, notwithstanding his signature appeared prior to concluding statement in instrument, and words "everything in it" appearing under his signature formed part of sentence before the signature

Postscript

Where owner of land wrote letter stating desire to give interest in land to addressee, and postscript in writer's handwriting stated that letter should prove addressee's ownership if writer died, but postscript was not followed by any signature, postscript was not "subscribed" as required of instruments to be probated as holographic wills deemed a valid will<sup>42</sup> Under statutes requiring that a valid holographic will be signed by the testator, a signature on an envelope in which an unsigned testamentary paper is inclosed is not generally a sufficient signing,<sup>43</sup> but the contrary has been held where the inscription and signature on the envelope has been considered as a part of the will and the statute did not require it to be subscribed<sup>44</sup>

Necessity for legal name It is not ordinarily required that one signing a holographic will affix his legal or true name,<sup>45</sup> and, where it is established that the signature is really that of the testator,<sup>46</sup> and it appears that he intended it to be a token of complete execution, the fact that he signs his first name,<sup>47</sup> an abbreviation of his name,<sup>48</sup> or merely his initials,<sup>49</sup> does not render the will invalid. Likewise, it will not be invalid if it be signed "father,"<sup>50</sup> or "mother,"<sup>51</sup> or by an affectionate name<sup>52</sup>

e. Attestation and Subscription by Witnesses

Unless required by statute, a holographic will need not be attested or subscribed by witnesses

In most jurisdictions the formalities of attestation and subscription by witnesses are not necessary to the validity of a holographic will,<sup>53</sup> and the fact that an attestation clause<sup>54</sup> or the names of subscribing witnesses<sup>55</sup> appear on the instrument does not affect its validity, even though the attestation would be insufficient to validate a will requiring attestation,<sup>56</sup> unless the circumstances are such as to make it appear unfinished<sup>57</sup> Under a statute recognizing holographic wills and providing that they shall be proved in the same manner as other private writing it has been held that such a will must be witnessed by two competent witnesses as is required in the case of other wills<sup>58</sup> A devisee has been held a competent witness to prove a holographic will<sup>59</sup> and such a will may be probated on the evidence of

Signature in exordium clause

(1) The decisive question in determining whether instrument was "signed" and hence a will, within contemplation of statute, is not whether person intended instrument to be his will, but whether he intended name in exordium clause to be his signature or merely to serve as description

(2) Where person in own handwriting writes purported will, and writes his name in exordium clause of instrument but fails to subscribe his name in order that instrument be "signed" within contemplation of statute of wills, name in exordium clause must be written or declared as an authenticating signature

Ill—Hoffman v Hoffman, supra

(3) Instrument signed by testatrix in the exordium clause and on top of each sheet would be admitted to probate as an olographic will signed in compliance with statute requiring olographic will to be signed by hand of testator, although instrument was not signed at end of last sheet, where examination of instrument established that will was regarded by testatrix as a completed document

§ 206. — Deposit or Custody

Under some statutes, a holographic will must be found among the testator's valuable papers.

Where the statutes so provide, a holographic will, in order to be valid, must be found among the valuable papers or effects of the testator,<sup>61</sup> or must have been given to another for safekeeping,<sup>62</sup> with the knowledge of the testator and his intention to make it a will<sup>63</sup> In the absence of such requirement, a holographic will may be deposited anywhere and with any person,<sup>64</sup> but the fact that a will is found in such a place as to indicate that it was considered by deceased as a valuable instrument is a weighty circumstance in deciding whether the instrument is entitled to probate<sup>65</sup>

§ 207. — Codicil

A codicil like a will may be valid, although holographic in form,<sup>66</sup> if executed with testamentary intent<sup>67</sup> Although it has been held that a holographic codicil need not be executed in the same form as an original will,<sup>68</sup> it is invalid if not wholly in the handwriting of the testator,<sup>69</sup> or if not dated<sup>70</sup> and signed<sup>71</sup> by him There is authority to the ef-

§ 208 Mystic Wills

Under provisions of the Louisiana Civil Code a testator may make a secret or mystic will by performing the acts prescribed by the statute

In order that a mystic, secret, or closed testament provided for by the Louisiana code may be valid, the testator must have complied with the requirements that such will be in an envelope, closed or sealed,<sup>76</sup> and presented so inclosed to a notary with a declaration by the testator in the presence of the number of witnesses prescribed by the statute that the paper contains his will,<sup>77</sup> whereupon the notary must have indorsed on the envelope a statement of the transaction signed by himself and the witnesses.<sup>78</sup>

§ 210 — Definition, Nature, and Essentials in General

a In general

b Necessity of observing statutory requirements

a. In General

A nuncupative will is one declared orally by the testator, in his last illness, and in contemplation of death. Testamentary capacity and intent must be present

A nuncupative will is one which is not written, but which is declared orally by the testator,<sup>79</sup> in his last illness, as discussed infra § 412, and in contemplation of death,<sup>80</sup> before a sufficient number of competent witnesses.<sup>81</sup>

What law governs. The validity of a nuncupative will of a United States citizen domiciled in a foreign country, executed and probated in the foreign country, is to be decided there according to its law.<sup>82</sup>

Pa—In re Yarnall's Will, 4 Rawle 46, 26 Am D 115

Testamentary intent As in the case of wills in general, a testamentary intent is essential to the validity of a nuncupative will,<sup>84</sup> and it is the rule in most jurisdictions that there must be not only the intent to make a will, but also the intent to make a nuncupative will,<sup>85</sup> which intent must exist at the time of making the will.<sup>86</sup> Testamentary intent to make a nuncupative will has been held to be lacking where the testator thought it was not lawful to make a will verbally,<sup>87</sup> or where it does not appear that he thought he was making a will when making the declaration.<sup>88</sup> Also, under the rule in most jurisdictions, an expressed desire of a person to make a written will,<sup>89</sup> or verbal directions for a written will,<sup>90</sup> or instructions dictated to but one person for the draft of a will which was not executed,<sup>91</sup> or a defectively executed written will,<sup>92</sup> or a disposition which is not testamentary in nature,<sup>93</sup> cannot be set up as a nuncupative will. The position has also been taken, however, that testamentary declarations may be established as a nuncupative will, if the requisites for such a will are present, even though the testator intended to give such declarations the form of a written will, where he was prevented from the completion of the execution of such will according to law by an act of God or some other cause which was not an intention to abandon or postpone such execution.<sup>94</sup>

b. Necessity of Observing Statutory Requirements

Although nuncupative wills disposing of personal property were recognized at common law,<sup>95</sup> such wills are not favored in law,<sup>96</sup> except in the cases of oral wills of soldiers in actual military service and of mariners or seamen at sea, as considered infra § 219, and the power to make them has been greatly restricted by statute,<sup>97</sup> and they may be sustained only where they comply with the provisions of such statutes.<sup>98</sup> It is the general rule that there must be a strict compliance with the provisions of such statutes<sup>99</sup> in order to prevent fraudulent practices and the fabrication of wills.<sup>1</sup> Thus, a nuncupative will, as far as it is not against public policy and law, will be given full effect according to the intention of the testator,<sup>2</sup> but the clearly expressed wishes of the testator which are not valid as a nuncupative will under the statute will not be given effect even to prevent an escheat.<sup>3</sup> Where statutes require all wills to be in writing there can be no valid nuncupative will.<sup>4</sup>

Place of making Where the places at which nuncupative wills may be made are designated by statute, it is held that nuncupative wills made at places other than those so designated are invalid.<sup>5</sup>

Purported will held insufficient

In an action to establish a purported nuncupative will where deceased became ill in his home and was removed to hospital where will was attempted to be made, a person who is suffering from his last illness in his home and from there removed to a hospital is not within the terms of the statute requiring will to be made in his home. He could make a disposition of his property only by formal will duly executed. Tenn.—Miller v Ford, 1 Tenn App 618

§ 211. — Persons Who May Make

Except where statutes restrict the making of nuncupative wills to specified classes of persons, the general rules applicable to wills determine who may make nuncupative wills

Subject to the rules peculiar to nuncupative wills with respect to the circumstances and occasion of making, the persons who may make nuncupative wills are determined by the rules governing who may make wills in general<sup>6</sup> Under statutes restricting persons who may make nuncupative or oral wills to soldiers in active military service and mariners or seamen at sea, as considered generally infra § 219, it has been held that a nuncupative will cannot be made by a person other than one of those specified by the applicable statute<sup>7</sup>

§ 212. — Circumstances and Occasion of Making

It is the general rule that a nuncupative will must be made by a person in his last illness. In some jurisdictions the testator must be in extremis without an opportunity to make a written will, elsewhere it is sufficient if the will is made in contemplation of death

It is the general rule, either under the provisions of statutes or otherwise, that a nuncupative will can be made only by a person in his last illness<sup>8</sup> Different constructions have been placed on the term "last illness," it being the rule in some jurisdictions that a nuncupative will is not valid unless it is made by a testator when he is in extremis, or overtaken

by sudden and violent illness, and has not time or opportunity to make a written will<sup>9</sup> Under this rule a valid nuncupative will cannot be made where a testator can dictate a written will and authorize another to sign it for him,<sup>10</sup> but the fact that a person who has been ill for a long time has had the opportunity to make a written will and has not done so, will not render invalid a nuncupative will made when his illness reaches a critical turn.<sup>11</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, the rule has been established that a nuncupative will is valid if made in contemplation of death, although not made in extremis, and although sufficient time and opportunity thereafter occurred to make a written will<sup>12</sup>

§ 213. — Property Which May Pass

Although there is authority to the contrary, it is the general rule that a nuncupative will passes only personalty. Authorities differ as to the effect of statutes limiting the amount of personalty which may be bequeathed

Although, according to some authority, both real and personal property may be passed by a nuncupative will,<sup>13</sup> it is the general rule that nuncupative wills pass personalty only, and not realty,<sup>14</sup> unless it is provided otherwise by statute<sup>15</sup> If the nuncupative will covers both real and personal property, it will be valid as to the personalty<sup>16</sup> Where the amount of personalty which may be bequeathed by nuncupative will is limited by statute, it has been held that the will is valid to dispose of

Necessity is sole justification

General rule requiring all wills to be in writing is intended to be as nearly universal as is possible, and nuncupation is not a matter of right, but of special indulgence as a last resort, and has no justification in law except necessity arising from testator's extreme illness

Particular circumstances

tive will while sick with illness of which he died, but neither testator nor his physician considered his condition mortally serious, will was invalid under statute requiring nuncupative wills to be made "in the time of last sickness"

Pa.—In re McClellan's Estate, 189 A 315, 325 Pa 257

(3) Nuncupative will made by testatrix two days before death while in bed suffering from a chronic weakness of the heart which ultimately caused her death was not admissible to probate as a valid will made at time of decedent's last sickness within meaning of statute, where testa-

§ 214. — Execution in General

Any words showing clear testamentary intent are sufficient to make a nuncupative will, and answers to questions may be sufficient. The naming of an executor is not essential

In accordance with the rule applicable to wills in general as discussed supra § 155, no particular form of words need be used in making a nuncupative will<sup>20</sup> Any words used by the testator showing a clear testamentary intent will be sufficient<sup>21</sup> Questions asked of one who is making a nuncupative will, when asked solely for the purpose of ascertaining the testator's desire, will not render the will invalid,<sup>22</sup> and answers to questions as to the testator's testamentary intentions may amount to as full a manifestation of testamentary purpose as a declaration in full and formal words,<sup>23</sup> but when a will is made by interrogatories the court must be more on its guard against importunity, more jealous of capacity, and more strict in requiring proof of spontaneity and volition, than it would be in an ordinary case,<sup>24</sup> and it has been held that where the words were drawn from the testator by a person interested to establish them as a will,<sup>25</sup> or where the words spoken in reply were incoherent or without meaning,<sup>26</sup> or where no verbal reply was actually given,<sup>27</sup> there is not a valid nuncupative will. The words used must possess finality, and if it appears from the language used that further dispositions of portions of the testator's property were contemplated there is not a valid nuncupative will<sup>28</sup>

Naming of executor In accordance with the rule applicable to wills in general, as considered supra § 134, it is not essential to the validity of a nuncupative will that it should name an executor<sup>29</sup>

§ 215. — Publication and Request to Witnesses

The testator must declare his words to be his will, and in most jurisdictions he must call on the witnesses, or some of them, to bear witness that it is his will.

The testator must in some form declare his words to be his will.<sup>30</sup>

Although there is authority to the contrary, in the absence of an express statutory requirement,<sup>31</sup> the publication must be made to all the required number of witnesses at the same time<sup>32</sup> It is the rule in most jurisdictions that the testator must also request the persons present or some of them to bear witness that it is his will,<sup>33</sup> but the position has also been taken that the testator need not call on witnesses to bear witness to his will<sup>34</sup> Where the calling on persons to bear witness is required, the request need not be in any particular form or in the language of the statute<sup>35</sup> Any form of expression, however imperfectly uttered, so that it conveys to the mind of those to whom it is addressed the idea that he desires them, or some of them, to bear witness to the disposition he is making of his property will be deemed a compliance with the statute in that respect<sup>36</sup> It is held under some statutes that the request need not be directed to all the witnesses necessary to attest the will, but that a request to one in the hearing of all will suffice<sup>37</sup> Under other statutes, the request must be directed to all the witnesses<sup>38</sup> It has been held that the request is insufficient if made in answer to a question, where the testator's intent to execute a formal testamentary act is not clearly shown<sup>39</sup> It is not necessary that the testator call on the witnesses by name<sup>40</sup>

§ 216. — Number and Competency of Witnesses

A nuncupative will must be made before the number of witnesses required by statute, and it must be proved by competent witnesses

Under statutes requiring that a nuncupative will be made before a specified number of witnesses, such a will is invalid unless the number of witnesses designated by the statute is present when the will is made<sup>41</sup> It has been held that the requisite number of witnesses must be present at the same time, and that it is not sufficient for the testator to declare his will first in the presence of one witness, and afterward in the presence of another,<sup>42</sup> on the other hand, a conclusion to the contrary was reached under a statute merely requiring proof of the will by two witnesses<sup>43</sup>

Competency of witnesses It is essential to the validity of a nuncupative will that it be proved by competent disinterested witnesses<sup>44</sup> A nuncupative will is invalid where any of the necessary witnesses are legatees under the will<sup>45</sup> The husband of a legatee,<sup>46</sup> or a person named as executor in the will,<sup>47</sup> is not a competent witness to the will It has been held that the witnesses to a nuncupative will must be competent at the time of execution of the will, and if not competent at that time they cannot become so thereafter,<sup>48</sup> but it has also been held in some jurisdictions that a witness who is also a legatee may become competent by renouncing or releasing his interest under the will,<sup>49</sup> but not by assigning it to another<sup>50</sup>

§ 217. — Reduction to Writing

In some jurisdictions, a nuncupative will is not valid unless it is reduced to writing within a specified time, or proved on probate within a prescribed period

Under the English statute of frauds relating to nuncupative wills, which has been held to be law in some American jurisdictions, or under statutes in other jurisdictions which have closely followed the provisions of the English statute, it is held that a nuncupative will is not valid if not reduced to writing within the time specified by the statute after the making of the will, unless it is proved on probate within the period specified by the statute,<sup>51</sup> but it need not be so reduced to writing if probated within such specified time<sup>52</sup> It has been held that the nuncupative will as reduced to writing must be shown to, and approved by, each of the attesting witnesses within the period prescribed by statute for the reduction to writing,<sup>53</sup> but the position has also been taken that it is sufficient for the writing to be made by, or examined and approved by, one of the witnesses within the period prescribed by the statute for the reduction to writing, if all the witnesses concur in the accuracy of the writing at the hearing on probate<sup>54</sup> The words reduced to writing must be substantially the same as those spoken by the testator,<sup>55</sup> and the writing must show that all the requisites for the validity of a nuncupative will have been complied with,<sup>56</sup> but it has been held, in construing a statute, that only the nuncupative will itself, and not the prerequisites required for its validity, need be reduced to writing within the period prescribed by the statute for the reduction to writing.<sup>57</sup> However, under a statute providing absolutely that the testamentary dispositions of a nuncupative will must be reduced to writing within a specified time after the making thereof, there is authority for the view that the will is invalid unless the requisites for the validity of the will have also been reduced to writing within such time.<sup>58</sup> The reduction to writing is completed with the testamentary statement and the signatures of the witnesses,<sup>59</sup> and an attestation clause is mere surplusage.<sup>60</sup> Where a distinct and independent part of the nuncupative will has been omitted from the writing, such omission has been held not to vitiate the remainder of the will.<sup>61</sup>

§ 218. — Nuncupative Wills in Louisiana

- a In general
- b By public act
- c Under private signature
- d Validity of will in another form

a. In General

In Louisiana a nuncupative will is one written by the testator or by another acting as his amanuensis.

Since in Louisiana all wills are required by statute to be in writing, the nuncupative will in that state has no similarity to other nuncupative or oral wills, but the term "nuncupative" contemplates a declaration by the testator of his testamentary intentions, which must be reduced to writing either by the testator himself, or, at his dictation, by another acting as his amanuensis.<sup>62</sup> Nuncupative wills in Louisiana may be made by public act, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section, or by act under private signature, as discussed infra subdivision c of this section.

b. By Public Act

A nuncupative will by public act is one dictated by the testator, written by the notary as dictated, and signed, all without interruption and in the presence of the witnesses. Such a will is considered full proof of itself and must, therefore, show on its face that it was made in full compliance with all the formalities required by statute.

A nuncupative testament by public act is full proof of itself,<sup>63</sup> and the advantage of this form of testament is conferred solely on the condition that, as to the manner of its confection, the instrument shall rigidly conform to the particular requirements of the law on that subject, and such conformity is of the very essence of the instrument and distinguishes it from other testaments which are not full proof of themselves.<sup>64</sup> A nuncupative testament by public act must bear on its face the evidence that all the formalities requisite to its validity have been observed.<sup>65</sup> In the execution of a nuncupative will by public act, the formalities provided by statute as requisites to the validity of such a will, as to the reception of the will by a notary public in the presence of a specified number of witnesses,<sup>66</sup> the dictation of the instrument by the testator,<sup>67</sup> and the writing thereof by the notary as it is dictated,<sup>68</sup>

(1) Under statute requiring that a valid nuncupative testament must be dictated by testator and written by

notary as it is dictated, a writing, transcribed by a notary at the bedside of a sick and feeble testatrix from testamentary language that came from a slip of paper handed to notary, not by testatrix, but by a third party who admittedly had prepared it, was not "dictated" by testatrix and was a nullity as a will La—Watson v Young, App, 34 So 2d 86

Identity of words unnecessary

the reading of the will to the testator in the presence of the witnesses,<sup>69</sup> the signing of the will by the testator, or, if he does not know how, or is not able to sign, the mention by the notary of the cause which hinders him from signing,<sup>70</sup> the signing of the will by the witnesses,<sup>71</sup> and the fulfillment of all the necessary formalities at one time, without interruption, and without turning aside to other acts,<sup>72</sup> must be strictly observed for the will to be valid.

All the witnesses required by statute must be present at the dictation of the instrument,<sup>73</sup> and at the writing thereof,<sup>74</sup> and they must be able to hear and understand the dictation,<sup>75</sup> and to understand the language in which the will is written,<sup>76</sup> and to hear and understand the reading of the will to the testator.<sup>77</sup> It has been held that where the witnesses profess to hear and understand the dictation, and make no request for a repetition or explanation of any of the words used, and voluntarily affix their signatures after hearing the instrument read as a whole, the will is sufficiently witnessed, even though the witnesses may not have understood or assimilated every word that was uttered.<sup>78</sup>

It is indispensable that the will should contain recitals by the notary showing that all the formalities requisite to its validity have been observed,<sup>79</sup> and no evidence is admissible to supply any deficiency in the instrument,<sup>80</sup> and such recitals cannot be dispensed with by agreement.<sup>81</sup> However, statutory requirements for execution of nuncupative wills by public act are exclusive and no formality which is not prescribed by statute need be shown.<sup>82</sup>

tator and written by notary as it is dictated, notary need not use testator's exact words in draft of will, and it is identity of thought, not of words, which the law requires

Recitals held unnecessary

(1) Insertion of phrase "at my office" in nuncupative will did not affect testamentary dispositions on ground that in fact will was executed while testator was confined to his bed at home several miles from place where notary's office was located, since under statute notary need not specify exact place or location in parish where will is executed

Construction of will

If intention of testatrix in providing, in her nuncupative will by public act written by notary public whom she named executor, that balance of estate should go to executor to be given by him to any charities he might select, was to institute the notary public as her residuary legatee, such residuary clause was null, since notary public, being instituted the officiating notary as the attorney to open and close the succession is not a legacy and is, therefore, valid <sup>85</sup>

c. Under Private Signature

A nuncupative will by private act is one presented to the witnesses by the testator, read by the testator or one of the witnesses in the presence of all the witnesses, and signed by the testator and the witnesses.

A nuncupative testament under private signature, or by private act, need not bear on its face evidence of the fulfillment of any of the formalities requisite to its validity,<sup>86</sup> since the compliance with such formalities may be shown by oral evidence.<sup>87</sup> A strict compliance with the formalities requisite to the validity of a nuncupative testament under private signature, as provided by statute, as to the writing of the will,<sup>88</sup> or the presentation thereof by the testator,<sup>89</sup> as to the number<sup>90</sup> and competency<sup>91</sup> of the witnesses, and the reading<sup>92</sup> and signing<sup>93</sup>

of the will, must be observed. No formalities other than those prescribed by the statutes are necessary.<sup>94</sup>

One who drafts a nuncupative will by private act,<sup>95</sup> or one who is named therein as the attorney to probate it,<sup>96</sup> or a notary to whom the will was dictated,<sup>97</sup> may be a witness thereto, even though the notary is designated as the attorney for opening and closing the succession.<sup>98</sup>

d. Validity of Will in Another Form

A will intended to be a nuncupative will by public act and invalid as such may nevertheless be valid as a nuncupative will by private act if it satisfies the requirements for the latter form of will.

Under a statute providing that it suffices for the validity of a testament that it be valid under any one of the forms prescribed by law, however defective it may be in the form under which the testator may have intended to make it, an instrument which is as an heir, was incompetent to serve as notary public in making of will

§ 219. Oral Wills

Under some statutes, a soldier in actual military service or a mariner at sea may make a valid oral will of personality.

Under some statutes, including those restricting the power to make informal wills to soldiers and mariners, a valid oral will can be made by any soldier in actual military service,<sup>2</sup> whether he is severely wounded at the time of making the will,<sup>3</sup> or is in good health, but in peril of death,<sup>4</sup> or merely about to depart to that which he thinks is peril of death<sup>5</sup> Under such statutes, it is also generally held that oral wills may be made by mariners or seamen at sea<sup>6</sup> It is not essential to the validity of an oral will of a soldier in active military service, or of a mariner at sea, that it be made when the testator is in extremis,<sup>7</sup> or during his last illness,<sup>8</sup> or even that he be ill at all, when the will is made,<sup>9</sup> but the fact that the testator was sick may show that an act, which might not have had testamentary meaning if done in health, assumed the gravity and significance of a will when done by one confronted with death<sup>10</sup> It has been held that a valid oral will may be made by a soldier or seaman who is a minor,<sup>11</sup> but, under a statute providing that only persons of full age may make a will, no exception will be made in the case of a soldier or seaman.<sup>12</sup> A soldier who is not in actual military service, or a mariner or seaman who is not at sea, has no greater privileges in the making of an oral will than has any other person in the making of a nuncupative will<sup>13</sup>

Subject matter. Unless provided otherwise by statute, as in the case of nuncupative wills in general, the oral will of a soldier or seaman will pass only personal property, and not realty<sup>14</sup> A statute which permits persons in active military, naval, or air service in time of war to dispose of a greater amount of personal property by nuncupative will than ordinary persons is valid<sup>15</sup>

Form and attestation. The courts have adopted a more liberal attitude toward the oral wills of soldiers made while in actual military service, or of mariners or seamen made while at sea, than they have toward nuncupative wills in general,<sup>16</sup> and it has been held that the formalities requisite to the validity of nuncupative wills in general need not be strictly complied with in the case of such an oral will of a soldier or mariner,<sup>17</sup> any words being sufficient if shown to have been spoken with testamentary intent,<sup>18</sup> but the words spoken must be testamentary in character<sup>19</sup> Unless provided otherwise by statute, no particular number of witnesses is required for the attestation of such a will<sup>20</sup>

Matters held immaterial

sion requiring that a will must be made by a testator over twenty-one years of age has been held not to apply in the case of a soldier's will<sup>25</sup> Under a statute providing for informal disposition of personalty by soldiers and mariners, a soldier's informal will may dispose only of personalty<sup>26</sup> It has been held to be essential to the validity of such a will that the genuineness of the handwriting be established<sup>27</sup> Unless the statute provides otherwise, witnesses are not necessary to the validity of such wills,<sup>28</sup> and a seal is not required<sup>29</sup> A soldier's will validly made remains valid unless revoked by some act of the testator<sup>30</sup> and its validity is unaffected by the cessation of hostilities<sup>31</sup>

Actual military service. The statutes generally provide that a soldier must have been in actual military service at the time he executed a holographic testament if it is to be admitted to probate as a soldier's will<sup>32</sup> While a soldier does not have to have been in extremis when he made the will,<sup>33</sup> under some statutes he must have been in apprehension of death<sup>34</sup> He need not have been "in the face of the enemy,"<sup>35</sup> but it appears to be generally held that there must be actual warfare in the prosecution of which the soldier is at the time engaged<sup>36</sup> Thus, it has been determined that a soldier who is on an expedition,<sup>37</sup> or in the enemy country,<sup>38</sup> or engaged in the prosecution of war in a combat zone,<sup>39</sup> or about to depart on a campaign,<sup>40</sup> or who has embarked to join forces in active combat,<sup>41</sup> or who is stationed at a camp prior to embarkation,<sup>42</sup> or who is a prisoner of war,<sup>43</sup> is authorized to make a holographic will On the other hand, it has been held that a soldier is not in actual military service while on an initial furlough at his home before proceeding to training camp,<sup>44</sup> or while in camp with his regiment before starting for the front.<sup>45</sup>

Mariner or seaman at sea. A testator has been held not to be a mariner or seaman at sea when he was, at the time, a passenger on a ship on his way to take command of a river lighter<sup>46</sup>

F. FRAUD, MISTAKE, AND UNDUE INFLUENCE

§ 221. In General

Fraud, mistake, or undue influence is a ground of objection to the validity of a will While fraud is separate and distinct from undue influence, it is often a mere question of terms, since undue influence may be exerted through fraudulent representations, and it has been declared that undue influence is a species of fraud

A person has the right to make his own will, but he must represent his own purposes and not the

in actual military service, letter which was written by soldier to his sister and which showed animus testandi constituted a testamentary instrument, irrespective of whether soldier had had any assets to dispose of or effectively disposed of them by instrument, or had had an opportunity to execute a former will, or had been on eve of embarkation purposes of others,<sup>47</sup> so that fraud,<sup>48</sup> mistake, as discussed infra § 223, or undue influence<sup>49</sup> in the making of a will is a ground of objection to its validity.

Compared and distinguished. Theoretically,<sup>50</sup> fraud is separate and distinct from undue influence,<sup>51</sup> since, when the former is exercised, the testator acts as a free agent, but is deceived into acting by false data, and when the latter is exercised, the mind of the testator is so overmastered that another will is substituted for his own.<sup>52</sup> It has also been stated that the difference between fraud and undue influence resides mainly in the conception that fraud is accomplished either by a single or limited number of acts,<sup>53</sup> while undue influence usually embraces a course of conduct.<sup>54</sup> Both, however, are equally destructive of the validity of a will,<sup>55</sup> and it is often a mere question of terms, since undue influence may be exerted through fraudulent representations,<sup>56</sup> and it has been declared that undue influence is a species of fraud.<sup>57</sup>

Fraud may exist without undue influence being present,<sup>58</sup> except in so far as misrepresentation amounts to influence.<sup>59</sup> Fraud does not necessarily amount to force or coercion,<sup>60</sup> and there need be no pressure, such as is necessary to constitute influence.<sup>61</sup> The term "undue influence" seems to in-

§ 222. What Constitutes Fraud

Fraud, in order to invalidate a will, must be such as to induce the testator to make a disposition of his property which he would not otherwise have made and the testator must be actually deceived, intent to deceive the testator is essential to actual fraud, but the particular moment of time when fraud was perpetrated may be immaterial. To give advice, persuade, or importune is not to defraud.

The fraud which will vitiate a will must be active, tortious, and deceitful, and not fraud of a constructive or resultant nature,<sup>70</sup> and it has been held not to differ from that required to vitiate an ordinary contract.<sup>71</sup> A will can be invalidated, either in whole or in part, on the ground of fraud, whether it is fraud in the inducement,<sup>72</sup> as where a beneficiary deceives the testator as to extrinsic facts which are material and known by the beneficiary to be false causing the execution of the will,<sup>73</sup> or fraud in the execution.<sup>74</sup> In order to invalidate the will, the deception must have been such as to have induced the testator to make a disposition of his property which he would not otherwise have made,<sup>75</sup> and, to constitute such, it must be shown that the testator was actually deceived.<sup>76</sup>

Fact that testator could not read does not justify setting will aside on ground of fraud

DC—Mann v. Cornish, 185 F 2d 423, 87 US App DC 110, certiorari denied 71 S Ct. 802, 341 US 932, 95 L Ed 1361.

Fraud sufficient to vitiate a will may consist of the intentional concealment of a material fact,<sup>77</sup> where there is a legal duty to disclose such fact<sup>78</sup> as where a confidential relationship exists between the testator and the beneficiary.<sup>79</sup> At common law, whether a false representation, not known to be false, but innocently made, is sufficient to justify vacating a will induced by it depends on the existence of a legal or equitable, and not merely moral, duty to tell the truth,<sup>80</sup> and if the parties are dealing at arms' length and no confidential relations exist or other duty owing to know and tell the truth, innocence and good faith in making a false representation, although acted on, are not a fraud,<sup>81</sup> and when no legal duty exists, the false representation must be knowingly or recklessly made.<sup>82</sup>

false character,<sup>87</sup> although the mere misrepresentation as to marital state, which does not induce the legacy or devise, does not amount to fraud.<sup>88</sup> To persuade or importune merely is not to defraud,<sup>89</sup> neither is it a fraud to threaten or illtreat.<sup>90</sup>

It is no badge of fraud that the draftsman of the will was appointed executor,<sup>91</sup> or that the execution of the will was clothed in secrecy, where this is clearly attributable to the wishes of the testator.<sup>92</sup> Also, a mere misrepresentation to the testator of the extent of his estate has been held not to be fraudulent.<sup>93</sup> A beneficiary cannot be held guilty of fraud in failing to disclose facts of which he had no knowledge.<sup>94</sup> The fact that, if decedent had left no will, her husband would have been her sole heir has been held not to preclude the court from refusing probate of the second will procured by him through fraud, to the detriment of legatees under the first will.<sup>95</sup>

§ 223. What Constitutes Mistake

Mistakes which will defeat the intention of the testator are sufficient to invalidate a will, but it is no ground of objection that the testator's knowledge of extrinsic circumstances was incorrect or incomplete. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a mistake as to the hostility of heirs toward the testator, or the reason for which a testator dislikes the natural objects of his bounty, does not render a will invalid.

Mistakes which will defeat the intention of the testator,<sup>6</sup> such as mistakes as to what the will contains,<sup>7</sup> or as to the paper itself,<sup>8</sup> are sufficient to invalidate the will. Also, where the mistake clearly is such as to involve the whole will, or the actual physical identity of the instrument itself, total invalidity results.<sup>9</sup> It is no ground of objection to the validity of a will, however, that the testator's knowledge of extrinsic circumstances was incorrect or incomplete,<sup>10</sup> so that generally, a will is valid even though made by reason of a mistake of fact,<sup>11</sup> at least where the mistake does not concern the identity of the beneficiaries or of the property of which the will disposes,<sup>12</sup> but a mistake resulting from ignorance of a material fact which would, if carried into effect, defeat the manifest intention of the testator, will not be given effect.<sup>13</sup> Mistakes in the drafting of a will,<sup>14</sup> in the description of the lands devised,<sup>15</sup> as to the person nominated as executor,<sup>16</sup> or as to the legal effect of the will or its provisions,<sup>17</sup> which do not defeat the intention of the testator do not invalidate the will.
